Synopsis

"In an alternate version of the present, Tokyo has been decimated by a shocking terrorist attack, and the only hint to the identity of the culprit is a bizarre video uploaded to the internet. The police, baffled by this cryptic clue, are powerless to stop the paranoia spreading across the population. While the world searches for a criminal mastermind to blame for this tragedy, two mysterious children—children who shouldn't even exist—masterfully carry out their heinous plan. Cursed to walk through this world with the names Nine and Twelve, the two combine to form "Sphinx," a clandestine entity determine to wake the people from their slumber—and pull the trigger on this world."

What's so great about this show?

An anime about terrorism isn't something you really see very often, so I definitely took a look into this show. The team behind it is a solid one, with widely renowned director Shinchiro Watanabe, known for Cowboy Bebop, Samurai Champloo, Space Dandy, and plenty others. Also behind this project is the great Yoko Kanno, an amazing musical composer known for her work in Cowboy Bebop, Ghost in the Shell, and too many others to list.

Episode 1 Impressions(Contains spoilers)

Spoiler \(Click to View\)

This show drew me in from the beginning, I really enjoy the animation and character design. I'm a little curious as to what the first scene was about and what it was that was stolen, hopefully that will be explained. To make it even better, the soundtrack was great as well. I feel the OP should be a little more upbeat, but it wasn't bad whatsoever.

Should You Watch?

Yes.

Where can I watch this?

Unfortunately, the only ways to currently watch this are:

Good to hear, I agree that episode one was great. I think it was a pretty big mistake having it only on Funimation, that really limited its exposure. If it was on Crunchyroll, so many people would pick it up.

Spoiler \(Click to View\) I think that was because if they didn't let her in, there is a risk that she goes straight the cops. Being in the group makes her an accomplice, AKA not telling the police.

Really great show. I liked it when I watched it a few hours ago.

Spoiler \(Click to View\)

As a side note, I'm really curious since it seems like they're special children with powers of some sort. Cause the story they were telling gave off the impression they were being trained/experimented on and other children died. And also that weird sense of having the exact grasp over time/distance when they said 2 minutes until power goes off and when they directed the girl where to place the stuffed toy

Well I came to this anime with high expectation and I'm happy to say it delivered the first episode was just action packed and nice bit of development. The only think that I did not see is explaining who the characters are and their background but it can be inferred.

The OP and ED are just simply amazing I just can't stop hearing them.

OP: <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=M6uA1auz51I>

ED: <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=gULDTTrD2JjI> (I think I enjoyed the ED a bit more.)

Other than that this anime looks promising.

Edit: Just watched the first episode. I don't think it's going to fall more alongside of lines of being similar to Steins;Gate as it will to Death Note. I have a feeling it may develop into being a dark, worthwhile watch.

Blu Rays are out of print and over $500 if you can find a legit copy. If I had the extra money, I totally would buy the set, it's one of those movies that need to be owned.

Let me clarify since I'm an idiot when it comes to wording:

"Aniplex of America released the imported Blu-ray box set on February 8, 2011. The box was immediately sold out and has not been reissued since." -source

Yeah so basically they no longer make them after sold out when they became available.

To keep this related to Zankyou no Terror, I definitely want to buy the BDs when they release.

This is one of my favorite shows that have come out this year. Nearly 20 years later, Shinchiro Watanabe can still make a masterpiece of an anime.
Agree with this to an extent.

Just watched the last episode yesterday, and while it did have it's fair share of problems, this was definitely the anime of the season. Truly unique in it's direction and execution, but dragged down by stupid cliches, unnecessary characters and weak writing, especially around the middle section. As powerful as the last episode was (seriously, the musical editing MADE that episode), the climax was still entangled with the biggest asspull the show threw at us.

Five was probably the sorriest excuse for a "tragic villain" cliché I've ever seen, and the very reason behind her introduction was ultimately nothing more than for some piss poor subplot that had absolutely no purpose within the frame of the story. This directly relates to the Americans, which were nothing but mediocre plot-devices throughout the whole thing. Doesn't help that they were the catalyst for the climax.

Lisa's character was similarly insignificant, but at least she helped develop 12 a bit towards the end so I can look past that.

I also felt that 9 and 12's reasons for terrorism were a bit underwhelming compared to the cryptic undertones they exhibited at the beginning of the show, and most of the plot points they threw at us were awfully shallow.

Well, while there definitely was plenty of room for improvement and the writers honestly could have done a better job, I'm still content with what I got. This show was truly one of a kind and a breath of fresh air in comparison to a lot of the shows we get nowadays.

Spoiler (Click to View) You're completely right about Five, I thought she would be a main villain but she was pretty much just thrown in for a handful of episodes to be killed off later. To be honest, I thought she would somehow tie into it to the very end, and I'm wondering what it would've been like if it happened that way.

Pretty sure he was implying Nine died in a similar manner Five was about to die before committing suicide.

Personally I think it's fair to assume he was shot shortly after the scene ended; a rather decent directional technique. The dude the americans in the helicopter were talking to through the radio said specifically not to let them live so they wouldn't leak their involvement in the whole thing or something. The Americans' role in the whole thing was a big pile of nonsense, though, which is why I wasn't too impressed with the whole climax.

I thought the series was fantastic in that it didn't adhere to the many cliché's in anime that we see in a lot of other series. This was a series that didn't spoon feed everything and allowed you to infer quite a bit with each episode that was released.

It was really well done!

This whole time I thought the Engrish was intentional because I had the impression Five was more Japanese and learned English as a second language... and that made me completely not notice how the normal Americans were also speaking in Engrish. Oh well on that one.

I'm surprised to see how many people don't understand why Nine got his headache and died, after it being explained an episode before and the same thing happening to Five.

As a child. She's in her twenties.

Too lazy to look it up at the moment, but I'm pretty sure she was taken away by the Americans in her pre-teen years.

Edit: Or assuming the children in the institution were not all the same age, anyway. Early twenties or late teen, either way she spent her main development years in America.

Besides it was blatantly obvious they were trying to pass her English off as native, which made the whole thing fucking cringeworthy.

Watched this a few months ago, thought it was an interesting anime at the time. Very much an anime that broaches into a topic that many don't often look into, yet nevertheless ends up being of a decent quality to distinguish from a lot of the usual yearly batch of anime that is thrown at the world's audience.

Great anime.

A good 9/10 in my book but it could have been longer. It got the point across with only 11 episodes though. I'm being more generous with my rating than I should, but I have to say that the soundtracks used were captivating enough.

Spoiler (Click to View) At first I thought this anime was going to have a much darker tone, even though it did have a dark tone with the past of 9 and 12 that led-up to them becoming terrorists, but it turned out to be acceptable in the end.

I was not satisfied with either 9 or 12 dying, but it was an inevitable end with the drug that was injected into them that was killing their bodies. I want to believe that is how 9 died, through both stress from 12 having been just killed and the drug taking over.

But instead of sending out a message through death, they managed to do it without killing a single person, and that to me turned out beautifully. They were like scapegoats in a much larger picture.

I am pretty dissatisfied that Lisa became such a hindrance to them. I mean I guess it all worked out for that moment at the end where they all seemed happy before the shitstorm appeared.

But yeah it was an acceptable ending, because instead of everyone dying, at least that bitch Lisa and Shibazaki survived to tell 5, 9, 12, plus all other numbers who died in the facility the story about them.
