

Forum: Hack Forums

Thread: Operation Sock Puppet

Martin Bishop - July 12, 2014, 11:15 am

<http://www.theguardian.com/technology/2011/mar/17/us-spy-operation-social-networks>

For a while i have been noticing a shit ton of e-whoreing on websites like POF and Meet Me app & many other dating sites. Yet what concerned me, was the same pattern being used over and over and over.

One picture of a girl. When the girl is messaged she give's out a programed response, something like "Hey, why dont you give me a call ()-*. or email me at @yahoo.com. I am looking for a relation ship. The account is always local yet the number is always out of state. When questioned the response is always "I am living over seas at the moment, can you please help me with cash".

Well i have been on dating sites for a while and i have seen this pattern countless times. What really concerns me is it is getting to the point i suspect a professional organization behind this. The method and response is always the exact same for a numerous amount of these fake accounts.

As of recently i ran into this article talking about "The US military is developing software that will let it secretly manipulate social media sites by using fake online persona's to influence internet conversations and spread pro-American propaganda".

This fueled my suspicions even more and lead me to think, could this program also be used to fleece the public of cash to fund the private US black budget. Could tons of working class citizens be giving there money over to programed software in a operation to collect funds from desperate people on the internet. Why wouldn't the military or government agency run a extremely large E-whoring operation of their own? Taking money from the people in more ways then one.

What i found also most alerting was that when i decided to bring my suspicions to HF in a reply to a post i made, explaining a situation i had where i felt like my online activity was being monitored due to many virus like glitches i was having and also a occasion where my account was phished. also i noticed my connection to a site i had been using was being detoured to what felt like a duplicated site that seemed to be compromising my connection to others on the site. As i was writing up the post as i am doing this post my computer was crashed.

This felt like something was hitting a note for who ever i suspected that was monitoring my connection and my pc approved to be crashed in order to prevent me from making my post (in the post i mentioned, i suspected the government from keeping graffiti illegal to fund money to the states and keep inner city urban youth demonized as criminal vandals. Further more subjugating graffiti as "Not Art"). I also mentioned that i felt like through out my experience with the internet the virus's i had been getting seemed to be in a doical state.

The infection seemed to be some what of a RAT and would come and go causing things to malfunction here and there. Not like a average virus that would cause pop ups or climax to the point where my pc would be fully compromised. This virus would even effect my google spell check, change results in my google search (as if i was searching for "cat" the results would be "dog"). Also at times while i would be blogging (about conspiracy's) my blog post content would be fully deleted.

I suspected maybe there is something to this "Sock Puppet" software program. Their are also reports of government loitering in forums replying to any one speaking anti-government with flam reply's. I have had more then my fair share of this when i was spamming on G+ for my blog, so i feel like i have created a thick skin for this. Yet after i made a post about this and i was crashed i felt like i got the typical treatment for online dissidence.

Martin Bishop - July 23, 2014, 2:11 pm really not one comment on this thread. I expected to at lease get trolled or flamed. Was this thread hidden?