The sales person has been arrested (alexHF) this is old news yes.
But the developer still remains and has re-wrote the entire product.

no more c runtime (11kb file)
full spdy support (ie, chrome, ff)
Also pop3 has been added.

please add tryigb to your skype for more information!

5 posts, suspicious skype, seems legit kid.

Would not recommend anyone contacting this person until he has been "vouched" or "approved" for.

The way your advertising it in no hell on earth this is not legal for a tool like this to be legal you would need to go throw so many chains to even consider it legal which i believe this tool would fail on everyone as the way its programmed, advertised and designed and again your stupid so please shut the fuck up with your legal views.

Omniscient thinks otherwise or the product would be discontinued. Also its advertisement was directed at personal use. As any keylogger would be. Nothing about debugging a browser is illegal Personal or educational purposes. That is merely what a formgrabber is. An automatic translation of debugging passed arguments onto the stack. If it is used for the intention of stealing peoples information its not the developers fault. Thats like saying a gun dealer should be responsible for all of their customers mistakes.

You do know HF sells other major softwares that would be considered more illegal than this...? God you dumb nigga

Reinvented - July 17, 2014, 1:14 pm

If this guy was selling a form grabber over skype and he got into legal trouble, saying it was meant for education purposes like debugging and testing can actually be a valid reason in court and can in fact get him out of trouble. As long as it's not advertised as banking right out of the bat he's fine.
