Thread: Running out of space in graveyards

What will happen when we start running out of graveyard space? Forced cremations or burying people where others are already buried? What do you guys think? I know it's quite awhile away but it's going to happen eventually right? Unless there's a huge natural disaster that wipes everything out.

I personally don't care what happens to my body when I die.
I won't be there so why should it matter.

Mass cremation, and a rise in funeral prices. If by that time if anything we could just bury it on the moon.

Same, I'm agnostic/atheist so I don't care what happens.

As time continues the bodies in the graves degrade and so do the graves themselves. People are forgotten, families vanish leaving graves untouched. Graveyards will be wiped in space for new bodies. Perhaps it will be a source of energy or the soil may be able to be used for some scientific reason. When you unwrap a sweet, you remove the wrapping and eat the sweet. The wrapper is forgotten but the sweet inside is enjoyed till it finally dissolves.

I don't really care what happens to my body, I think I would like to be used by doctors for transplanting to help those still alive get body parts they're lacking. Then just get cremated so I don't take up any extra room in this world.

I hope they eat me when I die. Would hate to see all that meat go to waste.

Grizz - July 16, 2014, 9:32 pm

I'd actually prefer to be cremated.

and then secretly mixed into Nesquik chocolate milk mix

When I die I want to get burn with the quad I'll die on.

I don't see the point of burial, I think you should just pay your respects to the deceased and move on in life.

I don't care where I end up after I die.

Maybe we'll send a spaceship and be launched into a black hole, I think that's a cool way to get rid of bodies. Then you can claim I went through a black hole.

Why can't they just make more graveyards?
