sesh - July 25, 2014, 6:29 pm

Unless this guy had a 30 pound weight tied to his ankle, he would've floated like any other human would

Echoz - July 25, 2014, 6:29 pm

I survived for 4:50. Weird ass experience right there...

Mashiro Shiina - July 25, 2014, 6:30 pm

I felt like drowning in pussy. Must've been the wrong site.

@j0ey - July 25, 2014, 6:47 pm

Pretty cool website!

hyhyyhhrf4 - July 25, 2014, 6:49 pm

Amazing - July 25, 2014, 7:09 pm

I survived 3 minutes 53 seconds because after he tore off his fingernail I didn't want to watch any longer. ?

Yeah shouldn't of fucking tried this on a laptop

ZuGgY - July 25, 2014, 7:19 pm

I went on to live for a while, but just got bored after a while, thanks for the share though!

xploD - July 25, 2014, 7:34 pm

I like this dude!

No idea how I made this much on a laptop, honestly a fucking amazing experience though, especially with headphones..

Genequil - July 25, 2014, 7:49 pm

You automagically die after around the 5 minute mark.

Fish - July 25, 2014, 7:51 pm

I might be a little bit more scared of a boat now...

Majinferno - July 25, 2014, 8:17 pm

I thought this would be one of those binaural things were you close your eyes and listen.

Gargarya - July 25, 2014, 8:18 pm

This is actually really interesting. Thanks!

I lasted until 1:43

Based Clam - July 25, 2014, 8:20 pm

This. When the guy screamed Charles, I thought he said shark because of his accent. I almost shit myself when I heard that. I was just waiting the entire time for a shark to appear especially after he tore off his fingernail.

That was a surreal experience.

rudeman - July 26, 2014, 12:45 pm

That shit was fucking scary man.....

R?DSPY - July 26, 2014, 12:47 pm

??????? - July 26, 2014, 2:12 pm

This isn't very realistic. Although I found it interesting, this simulation requires you to expand all your energy at once. In a real scenario, you would be able to float, and rest.

untrusted - July 26, 2014, 2:14 pm

It was pretty cool and took me a really long time to sink XD.

AURORA - July 26, 2014, 2:23 pm

The guy on the boat had no idea what he was doing. Even if he knew to release the main halyard, he'd probably forget about compensating with the boom vang/topping lift (couldn't see what type of boat it was or I'd add a better answer) and end up wrecking the deck of the boat or the helm.

What surprised me is why he didn't just tack around...

Eventually you'll get tired and from the panic you won't know what to do, as you see from the video some posts back was posted, he acted like he thought he was under attack by a shark, when there wasn't even a shark. This can make you very tired.

Well i've never drowned before but I used to watch plenty of episodes from "I shouldn't be alive", basically it's about people's stories and experiences when being stranded somewhere, in this example; stranded in an ocean. If any died it's because of hypothermia or straving to death but not drowning. I still don't get how you drown if you know how to swim.

Nygma - August 7, 2014, 1:39 pm

Exhaustion of fighting the waves and gasping for air would lead to you to drown as well as hypothermia. I would be freaking out looking for sharks.

xJPM - August 7, 2014, 8:15 pm

An experience like this is no joke, as I almost drowned myself just about a month ago. A couple friends and I were having a few drinks and thought itd be fun to go out into the ocean during 40 mph winds and a hurricane advisory. I went too far out and seemed like I was getting pulled out even farther despite giving 100% of my effort to staying afloat and getting back to shore. There were under currents and I got nailed by some huge waves probably a good 20feet high. I almost passed out from exhaustion, and for a good minute or two I accepted the fact I could potentially die from this poor idea.

Luckily I had a friend come out and save me with a floatation device, but nonetheless- scariest moment of my life.
