Thread: 1,000th Post Review. My Opinions on HF.

Aquilaane - August 5, 2014, 11:59 pm

First off I am making this post as my 1,000th post. (Wooooooh! ?) I figured I should make this post something fairly HQ and bring my opinion and views of HF public. I've seen a couple of people do this here and there. So yes I know it isn't something I made up--but rather something I always enjoyed reading and seeing how other people viewed HackForums.

My Beginning

(The start of my HF career)

Spoiler (Click to View)

I got introduced to HF through some internet "friends". We were starting up a project and they always mentioned HF. I figured I would sign up. Throughout the beginning I didn't really post much. I would lurk, learn, and ask questions when I needed help. I got bitched at for leeching, apparently using a code someone posted publicly on a thread while not being UB3R is against the law, which personally I thought was quite dumb and introduced me to some of the "harsher" members. Although through this I also found many helpful members which guided me and which I spoke to daily via skype. I was enjoying HFs and getting pulled in more-so by the day.

What I Learned

Spoiler (Click to View)

I learned many things on HF. I learned a wide variety of things and learned them in depth. I "studied" botnets, RATs, stressers, MyBB, HTML, CSS, and many other things. I've been involved in a few projects in my free time. I was not heavy in the "money making" side of HF, but more-so trying to being involved in learning, community, and helping where I could.

Opinions

Rep, members, groups, etc.

Spoiler (Click to View)

Within about the first month of joining someone attempted to scam me for $300, 300$, and 400$ (all different instances). These were all high repped members which really showed me how you can't trust someone on here just because of their past interactions on the site.

Personally I think that almost everyone on this site is trying to grow their epenis and increase their rep. I also believe this may not be as bad as everyone puts it to be. I believe this could shape people character, lead them to being more helpful, and being more involved in the community--which after all, isn't that what a forum is all about?

Through out my "journey" I have also seen many well known members and have experienced first hand why they are indeed well known. Many members on here are helpful, great business men, and enjoyable to talk to. While there are those who just bitch and whine you gotta learn to try and avoid them. For some try to make your "stay" a living hell.

Now for groups. I believe "personal" groups on HF are a brilliant idea. While although I have not been able to experience on first hand (yet...hopefully) I believe they only emphasize the sense of community and offer many great benefits to the community. But some people are too "group hungry". While no doubt, it would be awesome to eventually get into a group myself and meet, interact, and learn from members of the same interest, I do not support that people should "buy-in" to a group. I believe it ruins the point of a group. If a group doesn't choose the members they need then it would take meaning out of the group and be filled with 14 year olds with their mummy's credit card.

TL;DR

Spoiler (Click to View)

Overall, I highly enjoy HackForums. I am on almost 24/7 and am still loving every aspect of HF. It is a great place to make money, make friends, learn new stuff, get help, and be a help. While I know I am still fairly "new" to HF, I hope to only be more involved in groups, deals, members and become more community involved.

Thanks for reading and I would love to see your views on my opinions. May edit this as more crap pops into my head.

Didn't make it all colorful because I am typing this on my phone and personally don't like all the colors. But tried to make it as neat as possible.

Peace.

Meh. Nothing compared to many members on here. But it's a nice start and figured I should make a thread like this eventually. Sorry if it doesn't excite you. ;)

Congrats mate on the 1,000 posts! This is also the start of my journey on this forums. I have already learned a-lot and I only started 15% of this forums.

BTNH - August 6, 2014, 12:57 am

I agree about the increasing rep/epenis mentality around here. Too many people are also just trying to make money instead of help each other which discourages some users such as myself from getting too involved here. Not to mention that they will fuck anyone over for a little bit of money and then go to great lengths just to prevent you from winning anything (an argument, your money back, etc). Grats on your 1000.

Coollah - August 6, 2014, 12:57 am

100 rep and 1,000 posts. Congrats mate! I hope you'll stay awesome and enjoy your time on HF.

Really nice feedback, OP.

You are fairly new but you have learned quickly.

That's a good thing.

Hope you stay here long & make it to 5k.?

May I ask what you think is slacking in the thread? I thought I put it all summed up pretty nicely. Didn't want to write a novel, not many people would have read it otherwise.

Talu - August 6, 2014, 12:27 pm

Congrats on 1000 posts, good luck on 2000.

You're not a lurker if you get 1000 posts that fast, take me as an example. 787 posts in 4years and 8 months.
