Trying to follow some homies from HackForums on Hummingbird

If you don't have an account yet, make one. You can transfer your MAL over or start fresh like I did.

Note: You don't need to extract the files, just upload it to Hummingbird directly.

Also look how easy it is to update:

Here's Viper's video on how to add anime easily since some idiot didn't know how to do it.

[Video: http://www.dailymotion.com/video/x233jha_hummingbird_news]

You get to post on other's profiles calling them weebos, it's great.

Don't forget to follow other AAers and me for fun times.

??Post your link down below to join us!??

Here's the links to the other weebos:

Will this site import from Anime-Planet? I'll gladly make one if it does.

EDIT

It seems to not be possible. A workaround is to transfer to MAL then to Hummingbird.

You need to import it from Anime-Planet to MAL then from MAL to HummingBird.

Ha, I read the title and didn't know something like this existed but here. I caught this last summer in my house. Flew in threw a small window and after a few hours I decided to see if I could catch it and let it free. Probably one of the most awesome experiences.

It took a while to catch it and get it to trust me enough to sit still but I was able to get this video in the few seconds it was sitting in my hands.

I'm not 100% sure but I feel that HummingBird is Yuri website. But then again I'm not 100% sure. Also, there isn't a difference they both keep track of anime and what not, but HB UI is better and overall easy to manage. Another difference is that there is a follow/unfollow button and you can post on other people walls.

Happeh - August 8, 2014, 6:25 am

Hummingbird isn't anyones website here. It's just a better way to keep track of your anime. MAL/AP seems bulky compared to this which is more responsive, has better features and just less of a chore.

If MAL had a redesign to match the current HTML5 websites with some new features it would be #1 because it still has the best anime/manga database and pretty much all sites are made with the MAL database.

Right, So I post a statement saying im not impressed due to the fact that I cant get a simple verification email for my account, not hostile towards you, or anyone else for that matter. Why are you so hostile towards me? Do you have any relation to this site, other than being a user? I could understand your hostility if you own the site and are defending it. But if you have no relation to the site whatsoever then why are you angered that I dont understand the hype. It seems everyone here is so excited for this new hummingbird, stating its more user friendly, yet it took me quite awhile to figure out where I could add an anime to my list. There was no easy to access "Add Anime" button like MAL. I know im not the only one with these issues either. Also, How does being an SAO fan make me stupid or dumb. The anime I watch shouldn't classify my intelligence, as far as I know, considering I've watched plenty of other anime and still have not gotten any smarter, nor have I gotten dumb.

Not necessarily. You don't have to use the "mark watched" at the top, I don't use it. I go to my library and click the arrow next to the series I'm watching to move it up an episode. Once you play around with it for a but you'll find a few cool features, it's all personal preference though, they both log anime.

Weird, whatever then. Just kinda got to deal with it as new people keep joining. Once all of AA joins, then you won't have that problem of people spamming what they watched. It will kinda die down and then you can see clearly now that the rain is gone.

Joking aside, sorry for the users who weren't getting emails. We fucked up, have a huge backlog of emails at the moment (tens of thousands) but it'll all be working like normal in a few days. We added a notification to the users dashboards today but admittedly, it should have been done earlier.

Pushing out some new hotness today. Redesigned anime page that is much more minimal than the current one and we're adding trending anime to the homepage dashboard.

I really hope you guys enjoy Hummingbird, we've put a ton of work into it and we've got a lot more cool shit planned.

People aren't comfortable with change. Feel some serious facism and pride for MAL is what I noticed. Members there would take a bullet for it. Also, it's otakus, what do you expect? They love hating on everything.

I like how it's easier to update and more social. We're always asking here, "what are you watching" or "what are you up to", now they can see for themselves. Connects our little community we got going on here.

No hate, I love your website. Currently I'm using both and I'm just more used to MAL. Other than a lot of people having a few minor technical difficulties (no emails or notifications not working, which you've addressed already) I've had no problems with the site. So in all honestly the reason I like MAL better is because I'm more comfortable using it, which could change.

One thing I do like better about MAL is the staff pages, from anywhere such as directors and writers to artists that sing soundtracks for anime.

Also, loving the comment system and how you can see what your friends are watching.

For me personally it's the anime info pages which throw me off the most. On HB it feels like you just barely get any info out of it (and some info you do get like the genres just feels oddly placed or has giant text like the anime description, might be a matter of getting used to it though).

I made a picture with my thoughts comparing the two (and why I like MAL more currently), I think the concept your site has (the whole social thing) is really interesting and neat though.

Hey, that's awesome feedback, thanks! Here's a look at the new anime page that will be coming out fairly soon (probably tomorrow)

<http://f.cl.ly/items/2m2Y0q3a2g1B3a0l2F1X/new-anime.png>

The focus here is keeping the same amount of info, but making it all a bit more minimal. We have a lot of big plans for these pages so we've decided to 'tuck away' a lot of what I personally see as secondary information. Knowing who is in the cast, or what other shows are in the franchise are one click away.

We have almost as much info as MAL has on their anime pages but we're trying to keep things a bit more organized. I wouldn't say it's 100% there yet but I think we're well on our way.

We'll definitely be paying a lot of attention to how users are actually using the site so that we can keep making changes to improve the experience. I appreciate the solid feedback and the image to go along with it! I've saved it to refer back to.

We'll be embedding them from Hulu and eventually other streaming sources as well. We need to keep it legal otherwise google adsense will circumcise us. Here's what it would look like when you're watching an episode.

I didn't even know Google Analytics could tell you where we were coming from/how they knew it was HF. I wonder if the creator/founder of MAL will ever visit so you guys could duke it out. Highly doubt it, but how many days/months/years left till you get out of beta? Also do you have investors in Hummingbird? For example have you gotten an evaluation and opened to a "venture round"?

I sincerely doubt it. If Xinil cared enough to do that, he probably wouldn't have abandoned his platform. If his platform hadn't been collecting dust for years on end, we likely would have never made Hummingbird in the first place.

(Aug 9, 2014 07:47 PM)Yuri? Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) but how many days/months/years left till you get out of beta? Also do you have investors in Hummingbird? For example have you gotten an evaluation and opened to a "venture round"?

Beta timeframe is really hard to put a date on. Basically, we'll be out of beta when we're confident that our platform is not only on par with the content provided elsewhere (ala: MAL) but also extremely stable. There are far too many bugs for us to comfortably cast aside the beta blanket!

As for funding, that's not something I'm personally interested in with Hummingbird or my other project, Fauna. Sure, raising a seed round or series A would allow us to work on it full-time but it would also take away a lot of our freedom with the project if shareholders were involved and profitability changed from a convenience to a requirement. Funding is a very slippery slope. If you have the means to bootstrap (self-fund) it's almost always the right decision.

Another thing I'd like to point out is, unlike mal, when you add an episode that isn't released yet, it doesn't tell you and just adds it.

I like the site, if I had to give any constructive criticism so far about my experience on there it would be that as a new member who has no MAL and has watched a ridiculous amount of anime, i would love to see some option to quickly scan though a large amount of series and add them to my watched list. As it currently stands i need to do a little too much navigation to get a series onto my list. It works perfectly for adding series over time and the MAL option is good for adding bulk. But for those of us who need bulk and have no MAL, it is a little difficult.

Also another question mate, what influenced your decision to go with ember for your front-end framework against other options such as angular etc?

I definitely agree on making it easier to get your library started on registration. That's something we'll be working on fairly soon.

As for why we chose ember, it stands out from the other choices because it is strongly opinionated (like rails!). As a fast moving open source project, we don't want to spend time discussing and deciding on the best structure, designing a framework & creating documentation and guidelines so that new contributors can get up to speed. With ember, the big decisions have been made, making it easy to get going, share knowledge, and onboard new developers.

We also use the same stack as our forum software, Discourse, which makes integrating the two much more pleasant!

5Ds isn't very bad, however I would definitely go with the original series or even GX over 5D. :P I've watched most Yu-Gi-Oh! in both dubbed and subbed, dubbed when I was younger... then rewatched it later in subbed.

I watched the original 3 times now and GX once. Didn't really enjoy GX that much because I thought the duels were really short and most of the episodes were really random compared to the original where the duels were long, yet exciting and focused on one main story line throughout each season.

Very true, I loved the way the original series dealt with the issue, and the villains. How the villains turn out to be heroes/ allies, and some allies turn bad throughout everything. It's absolutely great.

Oh ya definitely, I was blindly surprised when I actually enjoyed the parts where they went back into the Pharaoh's memories and had to deal with Dark Bakura and Zorc, was actually really epic.

Feel free to private message me to discuss more Yu-Gi-Oh, I'm going to stop going off topic now, and going to talk about Hummingbird.

Oh and I sent a little suggestion over to the owner of HB, hopefully since it's still beta it can get implemented easily.

Quote:Hey man, I've found while updating my anime playlist that one thing seemed to be tedious while it's an easy fix.

While I was updating the show Naruto with episodes I've watched I had to click "Mark episode" about 300 times, I figured you could have an option which opens a whole separate page to allow users to use check marks to quickly add lots of episodes, or have an option to skip ahead and do 50 episodes at a time. It was a bit tedious and annoying to have to click the same button over 300 times just to update one show.

Again it's not something massive, and know you're in beta, but figured I might as well suggest it.

A lot of people use Taiga now it seems. It lacks a bit in the file/folder recognition department, but you can easily fix that by adding alternative titles to search in a series' properties. It's much more lightweight than MaU and works faster for me.

Note though that Taiga can only sync to MAL OR Hummingbird, not both at the same time, which is a shame since my Hummingbird will have to stay as static information as it doesn't seem too innovative at the moment.

Thanks for the response, MAL Updater folder recognition didn't really work for me anyway and already had to do manual folder selection. I will try Taiga then.

Don't mind them, it's just an elitist thing that is going on.

You're not entitled to your own opinions in this world, and every favourite anime you have is utter shit.

Also remember every favourite anime you have that isn't a 10/10 in their book is absolutely shit and you're not allowed to have your own opinions. A great anime isn't an anime that you enjoy, it's a non-generic, flawless anime that is boring as fuck for most people and you have to watch it cause it's top 1 in japan.

Remember the feeling you had when watching your favourite show where you didn't want to stop but click next episode again and again? Yeah, that's the feeling of shitty anime you never should have watched, delete it from your memory and go enjoy boku no pico

You can do either one and whenever you feel like it, export and import into the other.

It has always been dead lol, it's just a social network for attention whores. If you want a good website to use, everyone should use MAL. Good reviews, rank ladders, recommendations, active community, includes insane details per series (voice actors, cast, producers, companies, characters), better list aesthetics (customizable) and more. You can also export MAL and import it into HB but you cannot export from HB.

If you want to socialize, use Twitter. A lot of fun people are on it, just need to follow the right people and make some friends.

Yeah, it would seem OP only puts people he likes on the list, he and I got into a light scuffle, and so I'm not listed.

That's actually pretty awesome, I remember when Edward said that in Brotherhood... I got so emotional as it has a ton of meanings.

I am very active on HB, I've followed some of you above. Feel free to follow me, I follow everyone back to fill my HB with as much activity as possible :)

eight - December 16, 2014, 11:48 am

Alright, let's put this back on the top as there is an increase in weeb traffic.

Vip?r - December 16, 2014, 11:49 am

I ended up quitting HB, I didn't much activity from others and it got boring for me.

Plus they deleted my hentai thread. >.>

Don't be a fag and other people might talk to you. A lot of people respond and talk to me because I'm not a homo.

I just joined HB. Are there any special features I should take note of?

Since I will probably switch from MAL to HB just because it's easier to use and generally just looks nicer. :)

Probably because no one likes you. It's still one of the easiest ways to update your list. Especially with the app that came out.

Maybe cause half of the people you follow are inactive? Idk. I follow roughly 120 people and stuff happens every 10 minutes so there's always something new if I'm bored. Also I have this ZR thread with a bit above 1k pics in it, as long as it's not hentai it's fine so find another fetish it helps ?

Also posting my hb here again

Kinda dumb how they delete hentai when you can track your hentai on the site though

I ended up migrating from HB to Anilist because of the nice rating system it has http://img.prntscr.com/img?url=https://i.imgur.com/WKwv6ta.png much easier to rate things and it's customizable, so you can just setup your own categories if you don't like the defaults.

HB succeeds in the social aspect of it since there's barely any on Anilist as far as I've seen. Got about 5-6 people using it because of that.
