Here's why they named it Windows 10, and not Windows 9:

<http://www.cnet.com/news/is-this-why-microsoft-named-it-windows-10/>

As of today (Sept. 30), the preview of Windows 10 will be released tomorrow.

Register to be an insider here. That will give you access to the beta.

Here's some screenshots:

Start menu (Click to View)

Window manager (Click to View)

Right-click Options (Click to View)

Search feature (Click to View)

^image creds to Vape™ for these five screenshots.

I may add a video or something tomorrow if I get time. I'll see if I can get a virtual machine with it.

Kindly put the screenshot in a spoiler, thanks in advance.

Interested in Windows 10 quite a lot myself, will play around with it very soon.

I've put it in a spoiler, although it's a small image now that I resized it.

How did you get the OS early? Or are you just posting others screencaps of the OS? I personally, can't wait to test this out on a VM and take a look as I completely disregarded Windows 8 and stuck with 7.

420 Blaze It - September 30, 2014, 7:37 pm

Thanks, it looks beast as, installing it ASAP as I hate the Microsoft Integration with W8.

I'm running Windows 7 Ultimate x64 on my desktop, and plan to keep it for a while; unless this update is fantastic.

It's interesting nonetheless that Microsoft chose to skip 'Windows 9' after there had already been some press releases and discussions on it.

It's a screenshot from another page. I'll post a video on installation once I can download it and put it into a VM.

Destroyer Instinct - September 30, 2014, 8:07 pm

I have not seen Windows 9 yet and now here comes Windows 10..

brian188246 - September 30, 2014, 8:09 pm

It seems pretty cool, I am curious why they skipped Windows 9.

I probably won't install it because it'll be hard to have a buggy computer in college, but I used to install these for every release.

Pillows - September 30, 2014, 8:10 pm

I am disappoint. I thought that there would be more graphical changes...

And what the hell happened to Windows 9?

Cyrus - October 1, 2014, 12:22 am

Why Windows10, why no Windows9 ?

Hire - October 1, 2014, 12:24 am

Windows 8 is really bad to me, will be upgrading as soon as possible!

Tranquility - October 1, 2014, 2:26 am

It's a joke from Microsoft guys.

Windows 7 8 (ate) 9, thus 10 is next.

Roger Waters - October 1, 2014, 4:07 pm

Just got around to installing it on a VM, seems a lot like the Windows 8.1 that I have on my Laptop so far, but will need time to establish a bigger opinion on it.

mxx518 - October 1, 2014, 4:52 pm

I've been playing around with it, and so far, I'm not impressed.

It seems that they disabled windows snapping (I liked that feature). They still haven't made it possible to disable administrative shares without registry hacks. They still haven't included network management features that were available in 7. The Virtual Desktops feature is kinda barebones; maybe I am overlooking something, but there's no way to configure and manage the virtual desktops. In Linux, you can map specific keys to create custom short cuts to manage virtual desktops, and you can control how the virtual desktop is animated.

On the bright side, command prompt is more pimped out. I tested it, and the ctrl v shortcut works in command prompt, FINALLY!

It'd also be nice if Microsoft included a way to make a local copy or back-up all of the updates you download and install. I know you can do that with the service packs, wsus and ctupdate ..but still.

It'd be nice if they finally included a gui front-end for releasing and renewing dhcp leases. Anybody that has had to walk a client or customer through that crap over the phone knows how annoying it can get.

A few things that I still have yet to test. Mounting iso's without 3rd party software. I also want to test burning iso images to dvd and usb. Maybe we finally won't have to use 3rd party software and cli to do it.

And I also want to test how stable and fast file transfers are between different hard drives and network shares. Everything on my local network is 1000BaseT, so I'd like to see how fast 10 is compared to 7 and 8.1.

I know it's just a preview. And even though I am overall disappointed with this, it's still pretty fun to play with new operating systems and software.

They disabled snapping? This was one of the main things they were previewing, their four-way snapping work spaces.

Can somebody verify if windows snapping is working or not? It's not working for me. I'm going to download another copy tonight and install another VM for it to test it. Maybe my problem with it was that it was in a VM and its a preview edition...

I am very curious to see how Server 2012 handles roaming profiles with Windows 10. I have encountered some weird issues in the past with between 7 and 8 with 2012..

Diabolic - October 1, 2014, 5:37 pm

Pretty interesting that they skipped a version and went straight to 10. I guess they're tryin to get up to speed with the changes and try recover from Windows 8. Because Windows 8 was most anticipated yet such a let down.

Going to install the preview and see how it goes.

Honestly, the metro screen and start menu wasn't that big of a deal for me. I have more pressing issues with Windows than a fucking start screen. If you work in IT for a living, you'll know what I'm talking about.

mxx518 - October 1, 2014, 5:49 pm

I'm kind of tired of people dismissing criticisms of 8. They automatically jump to a conclusion that if you don't like 8, its because you are incompetent. In some cases incompetence is relevant, but in a lot of cases, its because the OS has some major improvements that need to be made. Hopefully 10 is a significant improvement.

Tranquility - October 1, 2014, 5:50 pm

They skipped 9 because they didn't want it to interfere with the other nines like win 98 and whatnot so they went right to 10 so support will be easier

Here's some evidence to support that statement:

Quote:Microsoft dev here, the internal rumours are that early testing revealed just how many third party products that had code of the form

if(version.StartsWith("Windows 9"))
{ /* 95 and 98 */
} else {

Works nice! Installed Solidworks for school and Steam. Everythings works. Got some strange bugs, but nothing big.

My synaptic touchpad doesn't work in win8 apps; I get some strange memory access error when shutting down my computer.

Anyone got a way to hide the build number btw? It doesn't work like in Win8, there is no registry line for that.

I'm kind of giggling that almost everyone is posting the same pictures of the start menu and search feature. I figured a bunch of advanced computer enthusiasts would be more concerned about discussing some of the more advanced features and functionality of what an OS would include.

Personally, the start menu was among the least of my worries about this OS.

I only hated not having it because tho process with windows 8 and pressing the windows key then typing something was just too slow. I built probably close to 1,000 machines with windows 8 and every time i had to prep it it dragged when doing the typing where as the manual clicking was faster. But to be honest with windows 10 it beats windows 7 IMO. You can use the same windows 8 concept of pressing windows key then typing but it is SOO fast im honestly amazed. You also have the option to do the old windows 7 way of getting to things. If i knew a good recording software i would record how lightning fast it is.

Just started the installation. I don't know about you, but when the Windows logo appear to load the setup, there's no loading circle or anything. A lot of people would be confused and think that the setup froze right there. Luckily, I'm patient and not an idiot and it went through under 2 minutes, so that's good. Also, looks like they still have the same installation procedure as they had in Windows 7, however, they changed the "Custom and Advanced" installation screen a bit, more font-wise and by removing the pictures. Installing in a VM too, posting to come back and post screenshots.

Codi - October 2, 2014, 11:12 am

Just a couple quick screenshots...

They slimmed down the side and bottom window borders, and added a nice drop shadow.

Link

Playing with the virtual desktops feature, I noticed that they're not trying for isolated workspaces like the linux-based solutions that some of us may be familiar with; it shows the taskbar entries for programs on other desktops with a small bar under them. If you click on any of them, you'll swap back to that desktop. Not sure how I feel about that yet.

Link

Another thing to note, the new snapping behavior for modkey+arrows is nice. Pressing the mod+up combo maximizes the screen like in previous versions of Windows, but pressing it again snaps the window to the top of the screen. Link

Pressing mod+down on a non-snapped window will snap it to the bottom half of the screen, and pressing it again will minimize it (as per current behavior).

Mod+left & right work as expected.

If you snap a window to the left or right side, and then use mod+up or down, it will snap the window to that corner. I'm glad that they've finally added this behavior, and I'm also glad that they recognize this should have been part of the snapping system since it was introduced.

Honestly I've gotta say that I really like Windows 10 compared to Windows 8/8.1, I really like how they've changed the Snap Assist where it automatically resizes the window to fit the screen to accommodate the other windows rather than it taking up half of the screen, I also like what they've done with the ALT + TAB task view thing, really handy. Only thing I didn't like were the icons, they felt weird to look at and also looked very pale (might just be my monitor but whatever). All in all I can't wait to see what stuff they've ironed out in the final release.

Do you have any other reasons why you like 10 better than 8/8.1? Your post pretty much says that Windows 10 is a superior operating system compared to 8/8.1 because of some minor cosmetic features and functionality that 8.1 didn't have. This copy of 10 they released is obviously nowhere near what they plan on having included in the final version. It's almost like some of you have never even bothered to learn and take advantage of many of the advanced features that Windows can do. All I hear from many of you is complaints about superficial bs that I would expect to hear from my computer illiterate grandparents.

Well I can honestly say I now feel comfortable using Windows 10. The accessibility is as convenient as Windows 7 and features of windows 8 are optional which I like. I think I may be upgrading to windows 10 from 7 finally. I think the user interface is easy to use and will be a major improvement from windows 8 flaws. GOOD JOB Microsoft. Thanks OP for the tips too, I only played with it for 20 minutes. Tomorrow I will analyze the built in security features and report back.

Tranquility - October 3, 2014, 6:24 am

Had no further issues on my VM, sadly I can't verify if the WIM-boot feature works there, which I am curious about as it'll reduce the hard disk space used for a basic installation (if you factor in having a recovery partition).

Furthermore, I wonder how we can provide some feedback to MS about what needs to be done to make Windows 10 better than its predecessors. Perhaps this could be done as a HF group and written by one of our tech-writers?

If this isn't possible, I wonder why a tech-preview would even be used, besides being able to build applications (be it for good or bad use) for it.

Haven't read much about big changes yet and haven't seen them yet either. A mate of mine runs it on his desktop and surface 3. It works on 3 screens, but still would have to ask if he can use/split the multi-desktop system on different screens.

Oh sorry I didn't mean to imply that I think that it's superior what I meant to say was that it just felt better to use, in my opinion, and when I used it I felt like it just "clicked" with me, so to say with 8/8.1 it felt kinda weird to me, not in a bad way just that it would take a while for me to get used to it as I had used XP and Vista before so it was kind of a dramatic change for me, as for the advanced features I'm not really that much of a tech wiz or whatever so I can't really talk about those features as much. All in all sorry for the confusion

The Good: Works. No longer has that stupid metro tile screen from Windows 8/8.1. Re-sizable Command Prompt. Much better window snapping. Has Windows aero.
Better File browsing. alt-tab and "windows key"-tab have been improved.

The Bad: Still wants you to use a MS account. Some pre-installed apps (like skype) are TERRIBLE. Still has MS store. (still sucks.)

The Ugly: The multiple desktops feature is weird(I'd personally prefer it to be more like the linux version). BING!, BING EVERYWHERE!

The search button (next to the start menu) is kinda stupid.

Other notes: The ui changes color with your wallpaper.

I got away without MS account because i installed it with ethernet cable unplugged. It has not re-asked me for ms account. Using skype from my windows 7, works exactly the same as in win7.

Multiple desktops, i just havent used those yet. Kinda need to get used to them.

Anybody can create a local account without having to disconnect from the internet. The option is kind of hidden, but it is called "sign in without a microsoft account", 8 and 10 both have this same feature.

Okay, just a heads up for anyone else who might possibly make this mistake. I made two User accounts on Windows 10. One Admin, one with restricted access. I then proceeded to make the admin account hidden via net user command. After i made the account hidden i was unable to do anything on the restricted account. When prompted for the user password for privileges it would ask for a password but it did not have a text box to input the password. I had to restart while holding shift to boot an elevated command prompt which allowed me to reactivate my Admin Account. Just a slight bug.

Don't find them all useful nor important, but that's not what it was about.

And the differences between read/write capabilities in Windows 8.1 compared to Windows 7 are better/faster, including its boot time.

Coffee™ - October 7, 2014, 10:10 am

My opinion on Windows 10:

Good :

The good side of windows 10 , it's, it got isanely fast boot time, the look it's very clean, it's running fast.

another thing that is good, it's alot of virus/mallware wont be able to infect system, because it's new. but in the down side it will be able in some time :(

Down Side:

The down side : it's rquire alot of ram Example 32Bit needs 4gb whic it's insane, but now i see more and more ram become normal. but in the other side, the people who got old pc and not got enough money to upgrade and want to test it can't.

and ofc drivers are not uptodate, because the system is new.

another down side, it's that many programs wont run on it at the moment.

Thats all (:

I just hope that the keylogger is just a tech preview thing. No one would use Windows 10 if that existed in the RTM.

haffy - October 21, 2014, 6:45 pm

Even though I had rather low expectations for this OS I decided to give it a try, I've been using it for about an hour now, honestly, Microsoft surprised me on this one. All that I disliked in Windows 8 has been addressed, I especially love how Metro apps are now run in Windows rather than a fullscreen application (fullscreen option is available), the window manager is also really nice (bit awkward to use though).

Honestly, I'm actually quite excited for the full release, great job Microsoft ?

Surely you're joking. A technical preview is a technical preview. It will have limited privacy, if none at all. It is not meant for use as a daily driver. It is meant to collect all the data it can to check for errors and to see what does and does not work.

I think they realized that closed-beta was useless and even if it was leaked, the bug reports weren't coming in enough and they weren't really "grabbing" much data that was needed. If they release it themselves with a control involved, it will be more beneficial. Closed beta leaks were terrible too, since people wanted them to just use as daily drivers, and not report bugs. Why do you think Vista was so shitty?

Yeah, that's what happens when your connection gets limited, i'm talking about something different. Now it shows that it's not connected - no connections available & full bar even though i'm far away from the router(should have lost 1 bar from full bar but it suggests otherwise).

What you see of Windows 10 is currently all a preview of what they have so far only just added to it. It is far from completion. It'd be worth the upgrade, in my honest opinion. It is what we have needed in a Windows OS since XP. We should have just skipped everything and went straight to this. All of these features outskullfuck Windows Vista, 7, and 8/8.1.

I doubt the issue here is the OS, mainly the drivers. AMD drivers have always been a pain in the ass to troubleshoot, and I guess they always will. It's almost impossible to do a clean installation of them before going through 10,000 steps first.

Well, I think it may be related to Windows grabbing the driver on boot for installation because CCC does get installed. The common 'fix' for it is to replace the atikmdag.sys file within %windir%\system32\drivers with the one in C:\ATI (or C:\AMD) but it shows up no driver installed so I'm fucked there. Otherwise this OS was flawless and stable.

It's not ancient, but 6 years isn't exactly new and it's not getting any newer. I just believe that it's better to be on the cutting edge of technology rather than living in the past.

That's not really how it works though, vista was trash when windows 7 was an excellent os, will also stay on w7 until i absolutely need to upgrade.

For those of you who have experimented with it, what has been your experience with the Edge browser?

That's one of the features that I'm excited to try out. The things I read about it sound promising and if they continue to improve it, it might become my daily driver ?.

It's a neat little browser.

But there are some things I wish they change about it.

If you don't mind, could you please elaborate on the features you think need changing?

As long as Microsoft provides support to the Operating System it isn't old.

I reserved my update a while ago. Awaiting when I receive it. I could rush it, but I can't be bothered.

Edit: nevermind, it's downloading.

Anyone else have a Linux feel? I like it so far, but I'm also a little disappointed at how similar it is to Linux. There's nothing wrong with it, but I expected a more Windows related Windows, if that makes sense. (Just upgraded from 7 for those wondering).

Encountered just a bug with Windows 10;

Whenever i went out of a game my keyboard wouldn't work and my browser (Chrome) would download every link I would click on, not sure if it's only me or known with Windows 10.

I've had Windows 10 since the RTM was released a couple of weeks ago, I've gotta hand it to Microsoft.. This is probably the most appealing and stable operating system they have released thus far.

I found this picture very relevant, had to share it. ?

lol, I do find Edge much better than Explorer though, so that was nice that they didn't make another terrible browser.

I have found a bug that none of my friends seem to have.

When I try to select files it doesn't highlight the file, but it is selected and i had to turn on the check box thing which is annoying.

Pls halp!

Exactly. It's never been an issue to me either.

Know that when you're browsing the web, you're giving away data as well. People became paranoia these days, yet like to post all of their stuff on social media. It's a contradiction.

Have to agree. Stable, not quite. But most entertaining and purposeful, yes. ?

Anyone knows about a windows 10 activator?

pac - September 1, 2015, 1:37 pm

There is one on the internet that I know of. It worked on my laptop to get pro version. I'd link it, but I don't want to violate any rules.
