Ummm... I don't know I was thinking about using this code to hack the NSA... ???
It could be used in many things. Such as getting the top results for a keyword from google. Or even an advanced sort of shell scraper!

Good luck getting more than 5-10 pages without getting blocked by their captcha.

WTF is this man ? Are you seriously planning to have this thing run for a couple of times over without getting caught ? I mean google ain't dump... Wait why is option strict freaking off there ??? Are you seriously declaring a variable without a type ? That's not good my friend. And why the hell are you making a new instance of regex on every loop. that is not good aswell. Bad only, baad.

Captchas really wouldn't matter after a simple implementation of proxies & user-agents tbh. Obviously more work would need to be done beyond what Only3 has provided here, but certainly not much.

I just don't get why people are giving the guy so much shit. He provided a snippet that does exactly what the title of this thread suggests it does. Not sure what the problem is.

Well he might not be an asshole in irl, but he imposes an image of himself that is not really well accepted, and besides that i had an altercation with him about an tutorial, and he pretty much mirrored my shit, so i didnt take kind to that act.

I added him to the ignore list for the pure fact that i just don't care anymore.

Now ontop of that, his english is rly the key here what brings his message in a wrong way, he might means something but expresses himself totally different, and that is the problem right there. No good or bad communication is bound for problems.

Please explain why an implicit declaration is 'not good my friend'

I think you are confused on what Option Strict does

Also, he isn't creating it every loop

He could just save the burden and use the static method `Regex.Match(string, string)`

But then again, it creates a new regex anyways D:

Electroalek was trippin, I wanted to say implicit, not strict :facepalm:. I will never accept personally that kind of delcaration. Here's why:

Quote:if you go to a gas station and tell the guy to fill your car, he will need to go and check if you want disel or petrol, which needs some time, but if you tell him, fill my car with disel, he will imedeately know what to do.

we do here the exact same thing with the compiler.

the compiler first needs to check if 1 is a integer and "string" is a string and then go on, but if you have it specified it can go along.

The compiler doesn't care what type the object it is, if it has no type it will just do it, if it's not right, boom error. You explicitly give it a type to help prevent these errors(if you do ever get a error, very unlikely), the compiler doesn't check anything, it just compiles it. Explicitly giving it the type (int i = 100) is just redundant information, 100 is type of int, so the compiler already knows the type. There is no speed difference in compile time, or run time.

Also what looks more clean and easier to read?

Also notice Resharper is giving me a warning about the explicit? It's because it's redundant code.

Also read the coding conventions, allot of members will learn a thing or 10.

Yes they can code, but they do not follow the coding conventions, which they should.

This is what you are meant to do, but you don't have to. Just because they do it doesn't mean you have to, if they jumped of a cliff, would you? No, didn't think so.

You were the one that was sayong that implicit was a c# thing, that's why I pointed that out. And if the PROs are coding like that, it means that that's the right way of doing it. Cuz they wouldn't be called PROs if they didn't know what are they doing.

It's not just a C# thing, I just said it was to shut you up.

They are not pros, they are kids who thought them self's, how can you call somebody a pro if they are doing it wrong?

They are good coders, but not pros.

The real pros, do code following the coding conventions, aka people who work a Microsoft.

I do not understand why people are hating on him for this thread. As stated by Idb, he made a little snippet and gave it to us. Nothing wrong with that now is it?

I do however agree that this code could be improved with the use of either a Using statement, or disposal of the web client later, and probably some other aspects should be taken into account as well. If you think you know how it should be done, or how it could be improved, take at least the time to make a proper reply instead of just telling him he's wrong and cannot speak English. Constructive criticism is effective, however the criticism you guys gave is not.

There is nothing wrong with defining a variable's type implicitly. In fact, as Cornflower Blue already stated and referred, Microsoft is actually encouraging this to be done as much as possible. This is not only a C# thing, but also heavily used in Visual Basic.

@nathan and ldb, I completely agree with you two.

Since this isn't my thread: TUP replied.

Thanks for Code Uri.UnescapeDataString

It seems this doesn't fix the "%20" in urls, I already had coded this myself:

```
Code TextBox1.Text = TextBox1.Text.Replace("%23", "")
```

```
TextBox1.Text = TextBox1.Text.Replace("%3D", "=")
```

```
TextBox1.Text = TextBox1.Text.Replace("%3F", "?")

I could fix this by hand with the code I wrote above, but here is a search result example.

Code <http://www.doctormacro.com/movie%20star%20pages/Day,%20Doris-Annex.htm>

Anyway, here is an answer, but maybe someone got a better fix then mine::

Code TextBox1.Text = TextBox1.Text.Replace("%20", " ")

Look, I made this simple application that uses your method to scrape how many pages your want.

With customisable delay, etc.

u dont need this if u use Uri.UnescapeDataString the url is valid for test try it b4 and after

IAmNotHere - October 5, 2014, 11:39 am

What am I doing wrong?

```
Code TextBox1.AppendText(Uri.UnescapeDataString((m.Groups(1).Value).ToString) + vbNewLine)

Exact code in my program with your source, I want to filter google webcache:

```
Code For Each m In New
```

```
System.Text.RegularExpressions.Regex("url?q=(.*?)&").Matches(source)

```
If m.ToString.Contains("http://webcache.googleusercontent.com") = False Then
```

```
'TextBox1.Text += Uri.UnescapeDataString((m.Groups(1).Value).ToString) + vbNewLine ' Same result as line beneath

```
TextBox1.AppendText(Uri.UnescapeDataString((m.Groups(1).Value).ToString) + vbNewLine)
```

Else

```
End If

```
Next

Edit: Working now, thanks to Only3. Here is my code:

```
Code Dim source = New Net.WebClient().DownloadString("https://www.google.com/search?q=" & Searchtxt.Text.ToString)
```

```
For Each m In New System.Text.RegularExpressions.Regex("url?q=(.*?)&").Matches(source)

```
If m.ToString.Contains("http://webcache.googleusercontent.com") = False Then
```

```
'TextBox1.Text += Uri.UnescapeDataString((m.Groups(1).Value).ToString) + vbNewLine
```

```
TextBox1.AppendText(Uri.UnescapeDataString((m.Groups(1).Value).ToString) + vbNewLine)
```

Else

```
End If

```
Next

TextBox1.Text = Uri.UnescapeDataString(TextBox1.Text) ' The code who made the url's errorless with the tip from Only3. Thanks.

I don't know, try look at the app I made, maybe it helps you...

Here's the source (little messy, I was in a hurry):

Here's the source (little messy, I was in a hurry):

<http://pastebin.com/tsfVc3Ns>

You were faster in posting, before I was able to post my comment with a working solution.

Thanks.

Code tmp = m.Groups(1).Value

tmp = Uri.UnescapeDataString(tmp)

tmp = tmp.Replace("%23", "")

tmp = tmp.Replace("%3D", "=")

tmp = tmp.Replace("%3F", "?")

tmp = tmp.Replace("%20", " ")

I had:

Code TextBox1.Text = TextBox1.Text.Replace("%23", "")

TextBox1.Text = TextBox1.Text.Replace("%3D", "=")

TextBox1.Text = TextBox1.Text.Replace("%3F", "?") And I missed a few with a second edit like in my code above.

Isn't my latest code with a double edit with the code below not the same, but now every non formatted string gets fully formatted:

Code tmp = Uri.UnescapeDataString(tmp)

tmp = Uri.UnescapeDataString(tmp) I had other values in url strings, which you didn't put in your code.

With my code I now have fully clean urls.

use this Code Dim Source = New Net.WebClient().DownloadString("https://www.google.com/search?q=" & Searchtxt.Text)
For Each m In New System.Text.RegularExpressions.Regex("url?q=(.*?)&").Matches(source)

TextBox1.AppendText(Uri.UnescapeDataString(m.Groups(1).Value) & Environment.NewLine)

Wops - the code look good maybe add option to auto save the urls also look the code above

I must add this line, otherwise I keep getting non formatted strings in the urls:
Code TextBox1.Text = Uri.UnescapeDataString(TextBox1.Text)

Only3 - October 5, 2014, 12:07 pm told u its look non formatted but its valid which b4 u unescape the url its not valid valid means if u past the url to browser it will open the url and u dont get error

I noticed. But since we are coding [Visual] Basic, I would like to have an easy for the eyes view with fully formatted urls as string in my search results. And you gave the answer.

I wanted to share a code to add to the code off the thread and guess what, after all our comments:
The above conversation should be skipped then and no extra url string format should be done.
Why? With my code added and a double format the clicked urls won't open, but the urls do open when the second format is left out. Here is the code with some info:

From my code change your TextBox1 to a RichTextBox1 and add this in your code:
Code Public Event LinkClicked As LinkClickedEventHandler

```

Private Sub RichTextBox1_LinkClicked(sender As Object, e As LinkClickedEventArgs) _
Handles RichTextBox1.LinkClicked
Process.Start("C:\Program Files\Google\Chrome\Application\chrome.exe", e.LinkText) End Sub

Every result in the RichTextBox1 you single left mouseclick will open the url in your desired web browser.

So can you make a custom search engine with this code, using all google but having none of their logos on the site itself?

You don't have to view the google.com site at all. Saves unnecessary CPU and memory usage by your pc. Browser opening and browser tabs opening.

All urls will open now. In the picture the ones with the "%20" in will open. If you do a double format in the urls with "%20", the "%20" will be left out and the urls won't open automatically like the rest on a left mouse click.
