Thread: [\[NOT WORKING\]Ello Invite Generator Website \(Link in post\)](#)

e?erg1zer - October 1, 2014, 3:40 pm

After a quick search, I found a site that's giving away free Ello invites. (It's not mine) Please leave a vouch if it worked for you!

Free Ello Invites

EDIT: The site is no longer working for the time being. I will update it if I find an alternative or the site starts working again.

EDIT 2: It's working once again! New thread made because the title to this one is no longer changeable.

Yeah, whoever is running it (I think it's /r/ello2) seems to have bots requesting massive amounts of invite codes, then distributing them through their site.

Thanks! Got me some OG's, now lets wait a couple of months and hope Ello gets big!

Thanks for the share buds, What is Ello actually used for?

?Redemption™ - October 2, 2014, 1:11 pm

What is Ello? Mind explaining that? I know for sure not everyone knows.

Taken directly from the about tab on their website:

What is Ello?

Ello is a simple, beautiful, and ad-free social network created by a small group of artists and designers.

We originally built Ello as a private social network. Over time, so many people wanted to join Ello that we built a public version of Ello for everyone to use.

Ad Free

Ello doesn't sell ads. Nor do we sell data about you to third parties.

Virtually every other social network is run by advertisers. Behind the scenes they employ armies of ad salesmen and data miners to record every move you make. Data about you is then auctioned off to advertisers and data brokers. You're the product that's being bought and sold.

Collecting and selling your personal data, reading your posts to your friends, and mapping your social connections for profit is both creepy and unethical. Under the guise of offering a "free" service, users pay a high price in intrusive advertising and lack of privacy.

We also think ads are tacky, that they insult our intelligence and that we're better without them.

Read more about our no-ad policy here.

Support Ello

Ello is completely free to use.

We occasionally offer special features to our users. If we create a special feature that you really like, you may choose to support Ello by paying a very small amount of money to add that feature to your Ello account.

You never have to pay anything, and you can keep using Ello forever, for free. By choosing to buy a feature now and then for a very small amount of money you support our work and help us make Ello better and better.

Privacy

When you use Ello we collect some information related to your visit. This information helps us understand in a general way how people are using Ello, so we can make our social network better.

Unlike virtually every other social network, on Ello you can opt out of information sharing. Read How Ello Uses Information to learn how.

Join Ello

Ello is currently invitation-only. To join Ello, you need to know someone that is already on the network. Alternatively, you can request an invitation by visiting the Ello Home Page.

I had that issue yesterday when ello itself was down. I'd just retry it a couple times or wait a bit.
