Biologist Forrest Galante was diving for lobsters off the coast of Anacapa Island, California, when he found this 70-year-old 12-pound monster. Instead of grilling it right away with tons of butter and lemon, he decided to keep it to show it to his family. Days later, he released it back into the ocean.

I would probably try to sell it, but I guess it's good that he let it out.

Damn that's a huge Lobster. I would have boiling pot and some butter ready for that sucker.

I'm so happy the biologist decided to let this creature back into the ocean. What a good guy.
