Purchase a linux root, first one I received was publically available on Google and also didn't work, was replaced within 8 hours with another root, but this one gave me no privileges, so I'm left with a root that does completely nothing other than list directories, ping, echo, tell the time of some place in Malaysia and all I can do other than that is look at it.

First root I received (Public one)

root<1234>95.6.36.3|22

Same password as listed on 2 sources on google which were from 2013.

Seller claims I'm the only customer that has had this problem, that might be so, but take this experience into account prior to purchasing a root from Theshadowbehindyou's store.

Theshadowbehindyou has been notified that my root was faulty, yet he refuses to replace it saying "It's not my problem", nor will he offer a refund.

Yes, the terms of service says it's a gamble, but understand that this terms of service wasn't in place when I purchased, despite what Theshadowbehindyou says.

We have changed our policy. Now giving replacements. PM me

?Plutus - December 19, 2014, 6:12 pm

Honestly you seem like a shitty salesman and I personally wouldn't buy shit from you just cause the fact you sold a public linux server & there seems to be not one satisfied customer here

infinitycold - December 19, 2014, 6:23 pm

Hello, the reason there may be some public root servers here is because I took IP ranges from SSH servers off Pastebin when I was scanning.

I will be giving Lawlly a few for free.

I wrote the scanner myself and I scanned for them about a month ago so some went offline by now, this isn't a scam and I'll be fixing it.

The web service isn't currently checking if what they are sending is valid, so the person who owns the website might have to implement this, but my scanner I wrote does.

Because the administrator can't currently implement a checker in his website, I will re-scan the entire database for all non-working SSH servers and give him back the new ones.

I apologize for this incident.

Theshadowbehindyou - December 19, 2014, 6:40 pm

I will be removing all list and adding freshly scanned servers to the site.

infinitycold - December 19, 2014, 6:51 pm

New servers are currently being scanned through random IP addresses instead of B class IP addresses from the ones on Pastebin.

Tomorrow we should have a few hundred as I am utilizing a good amount of RDP's for this purpose. Everyone who had a bad server will get it replaced by tomorrow.

Theshadowbehindyou - December 19, 2014, 7:16 pm

Edit: updating policy and added 300 servers!

infinitycold - December 19, 2014, 9:23 pm

The servers added aren't public and my scanner verified them working. It runs a specific command on the servers and checks the result, however we couldn't find a way to implement SSH server checking into the PHP script for purchasing the SSH servers which means that it's possible to get stale servers.

If this ever occurs, you can get it replaced within 3 days.

Thank you for using our service, I apologize to anyone who got public SSH servers. This was due to me using my personal SSH servers list which had some public ones to kick-start it with 2,000 and I didn't realize there were some public ones in there.

I have some Windows Servers currently scanning for more.

ProtectNull™ - December 19, 2014, 10:52 pm

Why couldn't you just scan the IP-Ranges yourself?, its better than looking at a saturated pastebin dump

infinitycold - December 19, 2014, 10:58 pm

Because I found that the IP ranges listed on there had huge amounts of servers, and my PC's connection was quite slow under a VPN. I was going to use them for a SSH bot-net but I didn't really have a use in the end, so I decided to use my scanner for other purposes. Only did this for about the first 200-600 servers where I was doing the ones on Pastebin, then I started scanning my own IP ranges.

I have some servers now scanning random IP addresses. This is much slower, but will bring unsaturated servers.

SSH servers should be updated every day from now on.

Before you make rude comments like that have you ever considered contacting me for support and replacement. People like you will be denied any sort of refunds or replacement due to your no good lack of judgement.

We offer replacements and I have not had any order on my site that sold 3 servers so can you please provide this proof. I don't like people making false accusations.

Next time you buy a product contact them directly or post in an appropriate manor if you need any assistance instead of telling people not to buy from us. You didn't need to act like a 12 year old.

Nonetheless I have checked out logs and we have never had someone order three purchases. We only had batches of ones and tens so your comment may be a flame post unless you can prove otherwise.

Here is proof that nobody has purchase three logins and I have checked to see any multiple emails or names based on you and proved none

Please stop making lies about my service. I have reported your post and will be contacting staff based on your attempts to ruin my sales

His post is a fake. Read the post above and the image. I don't know who he is but it's someone trying to ruin my reputation. I already have someone in mind I know but don't want to go accusing

It's very important you don't close the payment page! But it directs you after confirmed transactions

Edit: I'm off to bed now will handle any replacements when I wake up

Bought two of these before realizing they are just "BusyBox" servers which are pretty much useless.

Just warning others before buying this to make sure you understand what these are.

Yes its stated on OP Thread.

Most people don't know how to use them but you can still use them to make a API for booting. As stated in the thread these were for making booters nothing else.
