MadMango - December 20, 2014, 1:52 am is there any method which will hide hitleap com/traffic-exchange url ?

and saw direct domain com ?

Ignignokt - December 20, 2014, 1:58 am

1. Create a website on a free hosting site.
2. Make your page on that site redirect to where you want traffic.
3. Put your webpage's url in hitleap
4. Profit?

Hiya,

You can always make a blog on blogger and replace a code that will redirect your traffic to a link after 5 seconds.

So you use hitleap to send traffic to that blog and after 5 seconds that traffic goes to your url.
The source will be your blog and not hitleap.

At blogger HTML replace.

<b:include data='blog' name='all-head-content'/>

with

```
<meta content='5; URL=PASTE YOUR LINK #' http-equiv='refresh'/>
```

Example

```
<meta content='5; URL=https://hackforums.net/showthread.php?tid=4593023' http-equiv='refresh'/>

Hope that helps.

Hey,

does that mean I don't need to upgrade to premium on hitleap then? Because i'm on the 3 Euro plan and i'm doing exactly that.

Cheers :)

There are safer ways to spoof the referrer of a URL that iFraming or using meta tags to redirect... OP needs to get creative.

Yes if you use a meta tag you don't need premium to have as source a blog or website.

If I iframe it with adfly, I wont get banned on hitleap?

Dragon. - December 21, 2014, 1:05 pm

I suggest using the Blogger method and redirecting it to a site that can change your referer.

<http://anonym.to/>
<http://referer.us/>
<http://refhide.com/>

Sadly, I can't share because it's an exploit and doing so would lead to it getting patched.

Hitleap will never ever care what you do with your hits.

Adfly however will ban you and they will fast.

Hitleap hits also pays close to nothing on sites like that.
