All you did was modify your old theme. Try working with colors that would be pleasurable to the human eye.

This. Also, learn privately. We don't need to see everything you produce.

You don't need to as long as YOU don't click on the thread ;)

@op,

I didn't see your first post but as already said, make it pleasing for our eyes.

These colouring doesn't fit right in my opinion.?

It's kind of hard to avoid clicking on a thread. It looks awkward when 17/18 of the threads on the page are marked as read.

Fake feedback? I gave mine. Release something other than a modified version of your older thread.

The progressbar is cringe worthy.

Sorry buddy.

The buttons and group box look nice, though.

Well if your just starting out in gdi i know its fun in all to create something thats your own and i hope you don't stop making themes. Just like me you will get better and one way you can do that is looking at UI Designs and applications that you think have nice gui's and try to replicate them in gdi for learning experience. And try working on your color choices other than that nice work for your second time.

Let the kid post his work. I think it looks alright, but a little too bland Nice try... You just need to keep coding & trying & you will code better...

check my first theme (sweet theme) & last themes (fader theme or butterscotch theme) i have come a long way...

You are using themebase, with themebase you can code very fast & with minimal code, but if you try to code from scratch (without themebase) you will learn more.
