Thread: Vagex Alternatives

RedoxAlpha - December 23, 2014, 7:07 pm

I have tried using vagex and enhance views for boosting YouTube views but recently vagex views have been detected to be invalid while enhanceviews YT view service is temporarily disabled. Are there any other alternatives that work well?

There are but neither of them are safe. I'd stay away from it!

I'm currently working on a new feature for my program so users can get automatic views without having to rely on people actually surfing to get views.

The speed is 100+ per day, and all traffic comes from social media referrers.

Its safe traffic, and I've been testing it for a little while.

My program:

I'm releasing the new version tomorrow.

So you can try it out, and tell me what you think.

If you DO use it though, then PM me your username, and I'll give you some extra credits.

I disagree.

Ask how many people YT banned due to LQ traffic.

But the problem with that, is due to low quality SELLERS of youtube views.

The ones that use outdated scripts (or buy them, which would be stupid to sell them in first place), or can't update them when youtube decides to roll out updates to their algorithm of detecting fraudulent views.

Very interesting service you are running, I'll check it out. So will your program be up and running sometime today?

Yes, yes it will be. Doing final testings now actually.
