Thread: Retina IMac 5.5k\$

Indecisive enough - January 1, 2015, 12:12 am

So I purchase a 5.5k Retina IMac. Canadian taxes suck, I know.

How does it compare performance wise? What can I do?

Here is a picture of the specs

SIM-888979 - January 1, 2015, 12:14 am

That's pretty cool, always wanted an iMac but I don't have space for one on my desk.

Not sure what you're gonna do with 32 GB of RAM though, are you into rendering and shit?

edit: ayyy lmao shit post

Indecisive enough - January 1, 2015, 12:16 am

Ye I got it, but I haven't opened it yet. Its sitting in my room. Cant open it as of right now.

And no I'm not in to rendering.

You've thrown atleast $2000 into just the Mac/Apple logo and name and the Mac oS. Like, lookup those parts and the actual hardware in your computer? How much is it actually? You could have built your own computer where your not paying stupid money just for the Apple logo and got double the spec for your buck.

Hey, that's just my 2 cents but if you like Apple then enjoy it :P

Welp, he most likely wanted the Mac OS working right out of the box with support, and had the money to pay for it. Dropping 5 and a half grand on a computer seems insane to me unless it is your profession though.

Did you even read the build?

Do you even know how to read?

The build I posted has a much stronger processor, crossfired (two) graphics cards that are twice as strong as the one you have in your iMac, better RAM and the price includes the cost of a 4K monitor on top of all that.

Not to mention any games you try and run on the imac will probably be shit since you're running it on a single GPU. There's no way it'll run at 5k resolution

Oh and a 5k screen...

Well here is your answer:

For what you're doing (internet and league), it will perform very well. Neither use any sort of resources.

For any type of higher-end gaming, like battlefield, you'll choke at even resolutions well below 4k. Which will then look like shit, since it is not the native resolution.

For CPU intensive applications, like video rendering, you'll perform well, as high as the quad core i7 non-over clocked will go. Which isn't near as high as say, an over clocked 5820k 6 core.

Anyways, I've been trying to save up for a macbook for editing & what not, but I'm not sure if it'll happen anytime soon.

You want to buy not only a laptop for performance, but an overpriced laptop? Jesus.. Just go to the Mac section please.

lucky. - January 1, 2015, 1:00 pm

Not sure why so many bash on it because it is a Mac, I mean yes they are expensive as hell but it isn't supposed to be a standard PC, so comparing it to one makes no sense. When buying a Mac it is most likely being bought for the Mac OS, something designed for Apple products.

Looks dope, if I could afford one I'd definitely buy a Mac over a good PC build because I like the smooth OS.

Exactly. I would NEVER pay that much for a mac. You take one look at the specs and you sit there and wonder why anyone would.

People are so computer illiterate they think they're paying for a crazy good PC because it's 5.5k, when in reality they are just getting screwed and Apple gets 5.5k richer. You can't just look at the price and think it's such a good PC, most of the time you're paying for the name.

The graphics card works fine on Mac. There is no need to run Windows for that, otherwise Apple wouldn't have installed such GPU.

Besides, the scaling on Windows sucks balls. Don't bother running Windows, otherwise you'll have to turn on like 150-200% DPI scaling.

Sure, but the biggest ones are. Minecraft, WoW, CS:GO, Dota 2, League of Legends, and so on. If you want to run all Windows games, you obviously have to run it in a VM or boot into Windows.

I suggest the latter one, but a VM can also work.

Linus actually made a pros and cons of the iMac.

[Video: <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=8UJRYxP8gGU>]

Although i still think you paid way too much. Have fun with your new iMac.

Also i doubt i actually need the 5K monitor still will look really really great.

5k can be very beneficial for editing 4k video, as you can see your full video and still have room for editing. Apart from that, it's nearly useless apart from screen real estate. Not many applications, especially games, support 5k - meaning you'll have to down your resolution, a lot, which will end up looking like shit.

A 4K 28" monitor is enough to easily enough to edit videos up to 4K. The fact that someone would say, "Don't bother trying unless you got a 5K monitor" is absolutely retarded. Do you know how many 5K monitors are out there? Not a lot.

But why would you put mid range cpu and mobile hotcake 295 with 5k display.

I7 6 core or xeon equivalent with quadro would of been more practical if it was used for workstation use

According to http://www.videocardbenchmark.net/high\_end\_gpus.html , which is pretty accurate representation of real-world performance, the RADEON R9 M295X scores 4,582, while the GTX 980 scores 9,721. So the 980 is more than double the performance.

Regardless, neither card is going to run games at 5k at all, hell they'd get destroyed at 4k with AAA titles these days. Who the fuck buys a Mac for gaming?

The Mac vs PC argument can go on for years, both clearly have their advantages. OP just blew a lot of money for a computer that has mediocre specs for the price (outside of display), and then asks if it's powerful. So obviously there will be flaming. He could had bought third party RAM and installed it himself within 5 minutes and saved hundreds of dollars, for example.

The iMac Retina, even with i7 upgrade, is great at its price. Fully upgraded like OPs it is not.

The M295X is designed for mobile devices. It is no where near as powerful as the actual 295X card, which has dual r9 290's. It's about a fourth as powerful.

For this reason, no one compares M295X to the GTX 980, but instead the 980M, which is still much less powerful than the actual 980.

Edit: Here is M290X benchmark, gets destroyed by 980M

The size and how the components are placed in that compact machine is enough innovation. That, together with the monitor is innovation. Look at the size. Good luck getting any other AIO with a desktop CPU in it at that size and with those specs.

I'm not talking shit about stuff i don't know about. I have actually studied apple's progress from the start to 2013 for a school project and my conclusion was as expected. Apple isn't innovative, it takes it's ideas(aside iPhone) from other companies adds the apple logo and name, then asks 2000$ more for it.

Size doesn't really justify innovation though. I could argue the size of my iPhone 4S screen is innovative. However it's exactly the same as the 4 and my iPod Touch screen. I mean using that logic a smaller penis is more innovative. To be honest you could probably fit all this into a micro-ATX build + 4K display and people would be happy.

Smart Watches a pretty dumb in my opinion. If you have a phone use it. No point in moving the phone from your pocket to your wrist if you're still moving your hand to your face. Waste of time if you can barely see the screen (my dad bought a Samsung one). Surface Pro, I'll admit that it's semi innovative but too expensive.

No because it's easy to shrink down the form factor of a motherboard. In fact it's already done in various preset ways. If anything that should cut cost down. The base $2.5K model price is acceptable. However the other spec version really isn't.

First off: The unit is measured in mm (millimeters). Using your brain is allowed when arguing.

How do you want me to give you the exact measurements when it's curved? Please don't act stupid when you're trying to win an argument.. The iMac is under 5cm thick where it's thickest. If we assume both cases are squares, the iMac still has about 3 times smaller volume than that Colossus Micro case or whatever it was.

Since the iMac isn't a cube but the other case is, the iMac is closer to being 4 maybe 5 times smaller.

All the calculations are done by cacculating the volume from the measurements the companies gave us. The iMac does not have a 20cm depth (got that from Apple's site, but 20cm is the stand), so by looking at it, it looks like <5cm. Even if it was more than 5cm deep, it is still smaller than that other cube.

Act stupid one more time and I will add you to my ignore list.

Macs are made for beginners who have no idea how and what to do with a computer, while windows are for more advanced users that know what to do. That's why people complain about windows oh "I get so many viruses", "Computer always crashes". It's because you have no idea what the fuck you are doing. With windows you have so much freedom and you can basically do anything, but with a Mac you are just fucked with all the bullshit in it. For example for 5.5k I can build a windows computer that will shit on that mac 200x over. And for the guys that are arguing with OP about what a bad buy he made there is no point OP doesn't have the same intelligence in computers as you guys and he will just think he bought a good computer so just let him be.
