Thread: Minecraft Optifine cape checker

Joey Hacks - January 7, 2015, 2:27 am

I was wondering if there was a program that tests whether a list of accounts have an optifine cape or not.

I've been searching for a while and all the ones that I have tested don't work.

Thanks for your help ^-^

DEJORDZTA - January 7, 2015, 2:40 am

You could always:

- download Optifine
- install it
- then decompile your optifine'd minecraft
- search for where optifine runs it's check
- make simple application that loads a list of accounts
- run the same check
- output file

I can't be assed. Chuck me $10 and I might do it.

How about a full access minecraft account? ;D

Vamporno - January 7, 2015, 3:13 am

There a program called CatChecker. It checks if the account either have optifine cape or minecon cape.

I use this and it works fine. I've never had any problems with it

I've tried that program before. It seems to work perfectly, until after you're done checking when you realise that the Save button doesn't work.

Yeah, it does. It saves automatically do your desktop, at least for me. With some odd ass name.

Just checked my computer for any newly created files, none.

Maybe if someone fixed that part of the checker, it'd actually be worth some bucks.

It saves the names to the place where the checker is at.

It's not obfuscated... can't you just do that yourself?

How come the guy with no avatar and neg rep is really helpful and gave me exactly what I needed, while the l33t sounds like he's being an asshole?

Apteryx, not sure if that was your attention, but re-read your post. Sounds a little on the dick-ish side, I'm comparing you to a guy with no avatar.

Thanks fanufveufenu, that was the problem.

Because l33t members are arrogant, self righteous little brats who use their parent's money to buy them something else worthless.

After I have added the proxies and accounts into the program and press start, it comes up with a message saying:

AuthApi Test:

class java.net.SocketTimeoutException: connect timed out

Does anyone know how to fix this?

Thanks for your help guys ^-^

Probably the proxies you are using aren't good. Try using GPTools.

Proxy took too long to connect so it timed out, to check your proxies just try and connect them to google and if it times out it's a bad proxy and if it's good just add it to another list and use them.

Joey Hacks - January 8, 2015, 12:51 am

Now it's doing the same thing but it's saying connection reset instead :L

I think it might be because I have shitty internet

I have a 100KB/s internet speed, sharing that with two people who like to watch netflix and I think I have the worse internet in the world. This program runs just fine for me.

Try decreasing/increasing your threads, or get a new list of proxies.

If you want, you could try manually (or using a bot) gathering a fresh list of proxies from here, just remember that you have to use the ip:port format.

Joey Hacks - January 8, 2015, 6:43 pm

Hmm ok I'll try it now

Thanks for your help man

Sorry, didn't mean for it to come off like that. I've seen you talk about programming before(?) I thought that you didn't realize it was not obfuscated and if you did you would fix it yourself.

Not in this case. I was trying to be helpful not arrogant.

Joey Hacks - January 9, 2015, 6:20 pm

It's still not working for some reason :L I got new proxies and my account list is setup right and I tested it on all the threads and it still says the same thing

Thanks for your help guys ^-^I know it is late but the error is because the maker (WinstonTheCat) that uploaded CatChecker to LeakForums said:

Q: I am getting an error message "AuthAPI test: class java.io.IOException: Forbidden"

A: Currently this checker does not work as the test-account in the code no longer works. This error will always come up until the new version is released.
