Thread: Dream Firearm

Raf Simons - February 5, 2015, 11:20 am

Earlier I was thinking about what I'd like my next firearm purchase to be, which led to fantasizing about what my dream firearm would be. I'd have to say it would be a stainless steel Colt Python with a 6 inch barrel and a black grip.

Like this one.

It's not an unobtainable revolver, but with prices being $2000+, it might as well be.

So what would you guys get as your dream pistol or rifle?

Be realistic, don't start saying an RPG-7 with an ATN thermal scope and a M203 mounted under it.

Get a Berrett 50. cal. That would be dope as fuck.

If you have the money, put a grenade launcher under it.

jk.

OT: I do not own any firearms, as I am not of legal age. However, a .243 for hunting would be nice. I have shot my fathers a few times, killed my first deer with it.

Just curious why do people buy guns in usa and never use them, whats the point?

And, I don't know about everyone else, but my family and I hunt deer during deer season. And the violent crime rates are higher in the US than in places such as the UK ect, they are nessisary for protection in some circumstances. If teachers where armed, students would be less likely to try to shoot up their schools. Ect

Please don't start preaching anti-gun shit kthx..(Directed towards anyone reading this, this isn't the SRPP section)

It's not something worth owning in my opinion. It's chambered in an odd caliber, has odd safety placement, and it's unnecessarily expensive. Contrary to the belief of many people, handgun calibers can do considerable damage, even at longer distances.

Alaska - February 13, 2015, 10:30 am

My dream firearm would probably have to be a Barrett MRAD with the conversions for .338 Lapua, .300 Win Mag, and 308 Winchester. I've already got a Colt Competition AR-15 in 5.56/.223 and a custom 1911 with an essex frame, colt match slide, full length guide rod, bomar target sights and a bar-sto barrel, so I feel it would be a nice addition for what I have currently.

Reasons for the multiple cartridge requirements for my dream gun:

Cheaper to practice with .300 WM/.308 Win. than .338 LM, and I see absolutely no reason to smack deer/elk with a .338 LM or scare a new shooter with the recoil. Plus, I'd like to get away from the .338 WM. Love it for a hunting rifle since it just flies right through the meat without tearing much up but due to it being common where I'm at, it's kinda hard to find good ammo for it without being setup to reload sometimes and .300 WM will do the job just as well while being much more common everywhere.

You have to go through a ridiculous amount of legal drama. Background checks, paying tax stamps, local law enforcement consent, all that bullshit. The firearm also has to be from before May 19th, 1986 or be built on the receiver of a firearm built before that date, making it VERY expensive.

But yes, civilians can own full auto firearms in most states.

The Tikka T3 Lite is slightly out of your price range ($750) but it's a very good rifle.

You could also get a Savage Axis for around $300, buy a Boyd's featherweight thumbhole stock for $99 plus shipping and handling and get a quality scope for around $200. It'll all fall into your price range and you'll get a very nice looking, very high quality rifle.

Semi Rifle - Daniel Defence Mk18 with a BCM bolt and charging handle ... 5.56mm

Pistol - Sig P226 Navy Model 9mm..... Springfield operator 1911 .45acp

Bolt action - GA Precision USMC M40A5 7.62 Nato (.308) around 5k but out of the box its perfect

Shot - Mossberg 590 12ga its to easy.... its a beautiful shotgun very rarely ever gave issues

They are my top Firearms... I have ran all of the above in various conditions and I can tell you they impressed me, only Firearms I would want in my locker

Imfao tfw kids dont know the difference between .50 AE and .50 BMG

Imfao tfw this guy uses abbreviations from 4chan and tries to condescend people by making himself look knowledgeable on a forum full of 14 year olds.
