Thread: Unreal SMS - SPOOFING | CALLING | WORLD WIDE | USA

Frivolity - February 8, 2015, 2:30 pm

Unreal SMS does NOT currently work due to severe abuse by several customers. We will hopefully fix the issues in a couple days.

Received a vouch copy from Unreal today. Sent a PM with a request and he responded quickly and help me get it up and running. The program is very easy to use and straight forward. Anyone can do it. Once I logged in for the first time, I was ready to go.

After testing the program and the functionality of the spoofer using international numbers, the program works flawlessly.

As mentioned in the OP, the spoofer will not work with USA numbers as it is illegal. However, international numbers work great and after using the program for a couple hours now, I haven't encountered any issues! Overall the GUI is simple and easy to use. I highly recommend this product for international numbers!

Well Done Unreal!

I have a question.

On my latest spoofer i used (hawkeye, which is now shutdown..), i could put as the "sender" for example this:

+46793742614

Lets say i put that as the sender, and the reciever has a contact with that phone number, it would then add the message to the conversation with that contact.

Now since that number is 12 letters long, that wouldnt work with your software.

Is this something you can fix? Because if not, I am not interested, otherwise I am.

In this version of Unreal Spoofer a lot of the changes are not visible.

I've been working all day optimizing & stabilizing the code, removing memory-hogging components, etc.)

List of new features:

- Better animations (see Main & News)
- Counter for total amount of messages sent (see About)

- Optimized code
- Bug fixes
- Better threading
- Removed all heavy components

Overall, Unreal Spoofer is now much faster & smoother.

We do support messaging in USA, but not spoofing. This is simply a restriction impossible to bypass.

When a message is sent, the sender name is set to one of our pre-approved US numbers in order for the recipient to receive the SMS.

Haven't seen any spoofers that does support it, so it was just a presumption.

Yes.

However, sender IDs that contain the operator name (ie, "Orange", "Play" etc) and sensitive Sender IDs (such as "Police") will be blocked completely.

There are also some other minor restrictions in Poland.

PM me a test number, and I'll verify if it works for you ?

Unreal is working hard to make a new release, it's going to be one of the most exclusive and best features made yet. The software will be worth much more just with that feature added.

Frivolity - March 6, 2015, 2:18 pm

This is one of our most major updates since 2.0.

I'll just get straight to it by listing the new updates below.

- Robot calling (Caller tab)
- New name (Unreal SMS)
- Enhanced contacts system
- Bug fixes
- Updated loader
- Code optimization
- More support members

The robot caller only supports English at the moment, but I definitely plan to add more options such as male/female voice, language, etc. in the next update.

Support for multiple gateways is coming next update.

Enjoy!

Hey, regards the calling. As far as Unreal has developed the calling service will not spoof a number, but it will make it as a hidden number. Second you will not be able to speak, you'll input text in a text box, and when the target answers the phone a robot type of voice will speak what you have wrote down in the text box. PM me and I'll show you a demo. Cheers

Hopefully it isn't a problem for you. It's not a problem but could be much better if it was possible to put the name you want but it's still a great idea. Atm we're having some troubles with our gateway due to some users severely abusing the service. We're working on getting the web version up and running, and we're really closing in now.

When the web version is up we will switch from time based subscriptions to credit based. Don't worry though, the credits will be extremely cheap, perhaps even cheaper than our previous packages (depends on how you use it).

This had to be done due to the amount of users using our service for phishing and extremely blackhat activities (Like death threats and extortion).

All current users whom already have an active package will be rewarded credits on the new site accordingly.

Hopefully this answers some of your questions. I'll start sending test messages when the web version is up.

I would also like to apologize for my lack of support and activity recently, I've been extremely busy with school, work, and the transfer of Alt Dispenser.

You can send messages to US numbers, yes, but you cannot spoof your sender name.

Other countries support spoofing though.

Our gateway has been delaying us for quite a while now, and I'm currently looking for a new gateway.

This may take a few days as most other gateways require each individual sender ID to be pre-approved.

I have actually found a very interesting gateway which operates in the same country as me, just waiting for my new credit card so we can start using it.

If our current gateway removes our suspension before my new card arrives, we'll stick with them. Our legal terms have been updated too (more protection for each individual customer).

xSonoro - April 4, 2015, 2:42 pm

Just a pro-tip:

- If you're using an API, doing your requests directly from your program is an horrible way, people can see your keys in the outgoing connection and then use it for themselves.

- You should not display the whole error code from the response, this is basically telling people what gateway you're using.

I know, this is one of the reasons why everything has been completely remade.

I don't mind people knowing which gateway we use.

You don't need to switch to a web version if that's the real problem, I would simply use Netseal remote API to make this a bit better.

I already had something like this coded if you would like to check.

Feel free to PM me for more info.

No no, you misunderstood ?

I was planning on making a web based version ever since the initial release, but I was just stating that I won't have to deal with a secure connection to the API anymore.

The main perk of going web based is of course support for multiple operating systems and devices + customers won't have to download a client (Our client had a lot of false positives, for some reason).

The panel now works flawlessly and is faster than ever!

Open a ticket on the website if you had a subscription with the previous application to be rewarded accordingly with credits. People who lost credits due to the panel not working can open a ticket as well. I'll answer all tickets when I get home.

Will update thread later with new prices.

All tickets have been answered.

All previous users will get credits that compensate for their old subscription, just create a ticket at panel.unrealsms.com.

When creating a ticket, please include: Transaction ID, PayPal Email, time of purchase and NetSeal username.

Unreal is on vacation right now, so am I, therefor there won't be any support for the next few days.

The GRim - July 16, 2015, 11:02 pm

Do you want me to check if its working for India?

Frivolity - July 24, 2015, 11:59 pm

Sorry for not responding to posts/pm's, I've been on vacation (as stated earlier by +One), and Cyprus is blocked from accessing HF.
If anyone needs further help don't hesitate to post or contact me.

Hello ,
can you fix the problem when try send give me error (Error: Bad Credentials)

Che Guevara - August 27, 2015, 12:50 am

I have messaged him twice and been ignored. I will open a scam report soon if I do not get any answer. This is so not professional.

StevesTrolls - August 27, 2015, 1:33 am

Love the look of the site! On topic - do you have Caller ID spoofing?

I have to say who ever made your guys site is a beast, It looks absolutly stunning!
The panel looks very professional and has a nice clean/sleak design.

This looks like a amazing product.

I will probably buy this in the future!
