

Forum:Hack Forums

Thread: How do you get good at making signatures with renders?

Vintage????? - February 9, 2015, 12:39 pm

I've always been pretty shit at doing it, any advice for getting good at it? Tutorials?

DigiDeveloper - February 9, 2015, 12:44 pm

I've always found that method depends on the render im attempting to use So basically it all depends on the design element for me anyways Also having some strong resources will always be helpful .. ie: brushes / styles and so on. I'm working on a signature for myself currently :P

zyvox - February 9, 2015, 3:55 pm

I'd recommend to just look up shit on deviantart (or other sites) and try to copy it tbh. As a beginner you don't really know many techniques to use I guess so after doing that for a good while you can start mixing them up, adjusting them to your own preferences and perhaps change them a bit to use them with your own stuff. Find a bunch of cool sigs, on deviantart they often write the effects/stocks/renders used in the description of the image so that you can go get it. Otherwise try to just follow online tutorials. Basically just copy others work (but don't release it under your name etc cause that's kind of a dick move and you're gonna get shit for it and it's not nice to the original creator). Just keep it locally. Be creative.

Vintage????? - February 9, 2015, 6:02 pm

(Feb 9, 2015 04:55 PM)zyvox Wrote: CITE I'd recommend to just look up shit on deviantart (or other sites) and try to copy it tbh. As a beginner you don't really know many techniques to use I guess so after doing that for a good while you can start mixing them up, adjusting them to your own preferences and perhaps change them a bit to use them with your own stuff. Find a bunch of cool sigs, on deviantart they often write the effects/stocks/renders used in the description of the image so that you can go get it. Otherwise try to just follow online tutorials. Basically just copy others work (but don't release it under your name etc cause that's kind of a dick move and you're gonna get shit for it and it's not nice to the original creator). Just keep it locally. Be creative.

Not a beginner, just was never that good at signatures (see mine)