Thread: Government builds secret deep web search engine.

Grim - February 10, 2015, 2:09 am they call it memex and basicly it is a secret search engine that supposed too be able too track secure the Internet from hackers, human traffickers and other criminals. what are your guys thoughts on this?

Quote:The project, dubbed Memex Deep Web Search Engine , is well underway, and for the first time on Sunday night, we got an early look at Memex search engine — the crime-fighting search engine in action. The Pentagon's research agency gave Scientific American a preview of the software and 60 Minutes exclusive looks at the technology.

The Deep Web is a heap of illegal activity, pervade with child pornography, drug deals, Cyber crime and human trafficking. But because the dark web is 'buried' so deeply that it is out of the reach of mainstream search engines and law enforcement agencies, however, that's until now.

Memex Search Engine attempts to secure the Internet from hackers, human traffickers and other criminals. The deep web search engine was designed to overcome the above challenges by extending 'the reach of current search capabilities and quickly and thoroughly organize subsets of information based on individual interests.'

Thank you!

Not sure it will even help them at all in my opinion. I mean can't th already do all that stuff without this program seems kind of useless.

Oh god... This lady still thinks that North Korea hacked Sony, smh. There was no hacking done, the only thing that happened is they SE'd some people to get login information.

mofefp867v - February 11, 2015, 10:25 pm

How will this catch criminals? LE can't do anything without an ip address and deep web is meant to hide ip?

You're a jackass. That's still a form of hacking.

Aceman - February 12, 2015, 10:31 am

Okay so it's essentially indexing and labeling such as a normal search engine would?

On facebook, someone with a anon mask as his profile picture said "all yall are fucking idiots anonymous hacked Sony and next their gonna hack Isis"

I wanted to die.

Johnny.s - February 12, 2015, 10:35 am

I think its a load of crap.. same as Marianas Web ... What they can do ? Create a search engine that can bruteforce onion addresses and explore/index content.

im in anonmoose, i can tell he is real anonemoos member?

on serious note and on topic: Omg they better no make this, it will destroy deep webtotally, and no more Drugs :(

Adium - February 12, 2015, 10:37 am

People don't seem to understand what this "search engine" does so they're getting all hyped up about it.

It compares keywords found on the darkweb and matches them found on the normal web, e.g. if there's a human trafficer who calls him self l33thax the search engine would return anything which could be him on the normal web by matching username, writing style or other information posted.

In short: This isn't going to work against anyone who isn't retarded.

Hahahahah oh my god

Anyway, this doesn't seem like it's any different than the deep web tracking tools they have now that monitor traffic.

This seems like they created a gui interface in visual basic to track the IP address.

This is true and have a friend that works for microsoft. He work on this project. Microsoft, apple, and most ISP's are working together to share collected data on their internet connections. They share this with the NSA and the NSA is collecting all data on how connections are made and mapping live devices on the internet. They can figure out who uses a vpn or a proxy and what and where they connected too and what they used those connections for. They also infect offshore servers with spyware to allow them to see their operations. They do it to spy on other countries and can find U.S citizens carrying out ddos attacks from an offshore server.
