Yes, 0.001 BTC = 1 vote, but in the bitcoin network, there are fee.

5000 satoshi, but it's possibly to send 1 satoshi but the confirmation is too long.

Thank for your reply.

So if I send 1k satoshi at once and cover the 5k fees, it would count as 1k votes? Or are we limited in votes?

Also, it's a rank, a classement, more there are satoshi in the adresse, more the coin up in the classement !

Yes but it seems a little too easy, one person can send 3k votes with only $0.02.

So is there a limit?

I don't think there are a limit, and yeah too easy, but this personn search and good and active crypto-currency, also if a personn send 3k votes, it's a crypto-currency 'desired'.

Each user gets 1 free vote additional are 0.001 btc each not 1 satoshi but with the amount of members here we could do it on free votes alone.

Number two is crossed out as it is a sent payment and not a received.

With this information I will calculate the price for 1 vote.

Add the three payments together

$0.00040452 + 0.0000846 + 0.00004168 = 0.0005308$

Convert that BTC value to USD

$0.0005308 \rightarrow $0.1253$

Divide it by the number of votes OMC currently has which is 33

$$0.1253 / 33 = $0.00379696969$

Convert the BTC value to USD

$$0.00379696969 \rightarrow 0.00001609$

It costs 0.00001609 btc per vote + fees.

I love OMC but why in the world would you waste the time putting it on this exchange when on allcrypt our daily trade volume in BTC is beyond miniscule and they state clearly on their site that it will be removed unless it's it's 1 BTC per day in trade volume.
