

Forum:Hack Forums

Thread: Excluding malicious reasons, why do you want to learn how to hack?

joseph7e - February 17, 2015, 6:45 am

Interested in your reasons for why you guys learn how to hack.

Rationality - February 17, 2015, 9:58 am

You can learn how to secure yourself or an organization. If you learn how to attack, you know how to defend.

Sacred Symmetry - February 17, 2015, 10:01 am

Ethical hacking, you make a fuck load of money for pentesting etc, companies really fork out cash for this w0rd - February 17, 2015, 10:03 am

To learn what is possible, to have the knowledge ability to protect myself, to understand different methods of both exploitation and secure coding, to be as knowledgeable about the 'internet' and it's flaws so I am not as vulnerable as 95% of people are. The internet is the future and a lot of people are blinded by pictures of cats and 'social networking' that they don't realize the program they just downloaded to play vegicrush also has a backdoor.

Deidarass - February 17, 2015, 10:05 am

You know, computers are becoming huge things. You need to know how to do this stuff to protect yourself, profit, and other witty things.

Green-Arrow - February 17, 2015, 10:05 am

To have more knowledge and to make ca$h

joseph7e - February 17, 2015, 11:23 am

How do you go about making money from it? Do you need to get some kind of certificate then apply for a job at a company ?

Krueger - February 17, 2015, 11:34 pm

Certificate with a degree might help yeah.

TacoTejano - February 18, 2015, 1:02 am

(Feb 17, 2015 11:01 AM)?Google Chrome? Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Ethical hacking, you make a fuck load of money for pentesting etc, companies really fork out cash for this its hard to get into something like that though. and from what i heard they dont even be paying all that much cause there are so many compsec firms

FRANKIE - February 18, 2015, 1:03 am

Simply for the money. People underestimate how much money you can really make doing this stuff for a living.