Thread: Sophos | Lifetime Antivirus | Installs On Unlimited Computers

CommanderBoss - February 23, 2015, 7:58 pm

I am selling an installation file that can install Sophos Endpoint Security and Control on an unlimited number of computers. The program will NEVER EXPIRE as it installs a lifetime license automatically. The installer requires no license key or account info and does not verify the install on any of Sophos's servers. However, it receives updates without any problems. You will not find anything like this ANYWHERE ELSE because the installer is given to a very limited number of people.

Compatibility: Any version of Windows, 2000 or newer. This includes server editions.

Note:

Consumers can only buy Sophos from Staples as part of a bundle called Total Support. It normally costs $180 for one year and $280 for two years. With this installer, you will never have to buy antivirus ever again. However, it does not include a firewall. It includes active virus and web protection but not a firewall. It can only be installed if it would be the only form of antivirus on the computer. Other antivirus programs could always be added back after but Sophos is good enough at virus and web protection on its own.

Price:

Sophos Endpoint Security and Control Unlimited Lifetime Installer - $19.99

How it works:

You will receive the installer itself in the form of an executable. It is not a cracked program but rather an administrator only version made by the actual company and given to very few people. You are never given a license key and will never be asked for one by the installer or program.

Bitcoin Autobuy:

<https://aiobuy.net/buy/2805>

I will consider accepting PayPal from trusted members. PM me if you would like to try and pay this way.

Installation Instructions:

- 1) Download setup file, save wherever. I always use desktop but it doesn't really matter.
- 2) Run setup file. It should pop up with a window that says it's extracting everything to C:\ESXP\ . Hit next. At NO POINT should you ever go to C:\ESXP\ and run the setup from there. If you do, the installation WILL NOT work properly and the program will not update after.
- 3) Keep hitting next until the window goes away. A minute or so might pass (and a smaller installshield window might pop up) and a purple shield will appear on your taskbar. After a little while it will finish updating, and the shield will change to blue with a white S, the new Sophos icon. You can right click on the shield and click "update now" to force an update check or "view updating status" to make sure it's still moving. Once you right click on the new icon and "Open Sophos Endpoint and Security and Control" is no longer grayed out, you know you did everything correctly. Open the program and view the panel. Congratulation, you're looking at your brand new lifetime antivirus!

If for any reason the installation does not work, you can remove Sophos and try again. However, after a messed up install, it is not always added to the program list. If that happens, you have to use regedit + control F to find and delete all keys with Sophos in it. I had to do that once and it took less than 10 minutes. Unfortunately there is no automated way to do this but it will remove a botched install 100% of the time if followed by a restart.

This might seem complicated because of everything that I wrote but it is not. I simply wanted to cover everything and be as detailed as possible in order to eliminate confusion and time waiting for me to respond to a post or PM.

Terms of Service:

No refunds. Chargebacks will result in a scam report.

I can refuse service to anyone at any time at my sole discretion.

You cannot resell this installer under any circumstances.

You can use the installer on other people's computers but cannot share it with anyone on HF or any other sites.

riekal - February 23, 2015, 8:04 pm

Interesting. How many of these can you generate?

CommanderBoss - February 23, 2015, 8:15 pm

As many as I want. I work for the company and we only have one account that generates licenses per region, and each region consists of multiple locations across the state from which employees could log in. With the way the system is set up there's no way for them to find out exactly who generates each license.

CommanderBoss - February 26, 2015, 9:01 am

I have given a vouch license to riekal. He'll post here once he's used it.

riekal - February 27, 2015, 5:59 am

The license worked like a charm. He's clearly legit here guys. I've used sophos in a corporate environment a few times because it is extremely trusted.

The license works on one machine but OP is willing to sell multiple i'm sure if you have multiple machines that you need protected.

If you guys want something better than your free versions of AV, i'd grab this fast, you never know when he might stop selling!

Slurping - February 27, 2015, 7:30 am

Please forgive me if this is a silly question, but is this the Sophos Endpoint product or the $90/year "Staples EasyTech" product?

I can only find the stand-alone Sophos product/support called EasyTech at Staples, but if they/you are actually selling the product mentioned in the subject of this thread, Sophos Endpoint Protection, I'm very interested.

Also not to be a grammar nazi, but it can't have a 100% guarantee that you won't get a virus and then add "..but if you do..."

GLWS either way mate!

GLWS either way mate!The product sold at Staples is Sophos Endpoint Protection and that's what you get if you buy it from me. And with all due respect, that's on Sophos and not me because they're the ones who provide the guarantee like that.

Slurping - February 27, 2015, 8:18 am

I didn't mean any disrespect to you either, I was just teasing about the warranty. :)

Cool though, Sophos Endpoint Protection is a server-based enterprise solution for medium to large environments, it is quite nice. I am particularly fond of the management server it comes with, and the option of cloud-based management, and it integrates into AD to allows full Windows and Mac patch control. It's about $60/seat when you buy them individually, but of course to use it you'll want the management console, or else you aren't getting the benefit of endpoint protection.

I can't seem to find it on Staples at all though, do you have a URL or a mention of it anywhere? All I see Staples selling is the little stand-alone Sophos product which is totally different from Endpoint Management.

<http://www.sophos.com/en-us/products/endpoint-antivirus.aspx>

CommanderBoss - March 2, 2015, 2:18 pm

I'm not sure if we're talking about the same version or not. When the program is opened it says Sophos Endpoint Security and Control. I did find it on Staples but it does not give a specific version. It just says Sophos on the Total Support page.

CommanderBoss - March 5, 2015, 1:32 pm

Now Staples offers something called Virus Shield Plus instead of Total Support but its the exact same thing and still comes with the same version of Sophos that I'm offering here.

CommanderBoss - April 7, 2015, 6:53 pm

I have changed the way that I offer Sophos. I now sell an installer that can install Sophos Endpoint Security on Control with a lifetime license on an unlimited number of PCs. It does not ask for any license info or anything during installation. Feel free to post or PM me with any questions.

riekal - April 7, 2015, 7:05 pm

I need a new machine. I already got an install from you for my laptop and I need to move the installation. Can ya help me out??

By the way guys, if you aren't buying this from CommanderBoss you're crazy. This is a damn good deal.

Whats so special about Sophos?

I can just get a cracked Avast or ESET which does the same job?

I'm not questioning the license time or unlimited installer, I'm questioning how good it is.

I'm not questioning the license time or unlimited installer, I'm questioning how good it is. As far as I know, when i used to build malwares in the good ol' time, Sophos was almost always detecting it when other AVs did not. I think they have progressed more on their proactive security system than any other AV on the market.

I used to work at Staples as a technician and the antivirus we pushed was Sophos. They had a deal with Staples and consumers could only get Sophos if they left their computer at the store while it was installed by a tech. I'm almost positive it's still like that. I saw a lot of different computers with different antiviruses on them. The customers who we sold Sophos to would come in with the smallest problems; toolbars and benign bloatware at worst that they had been tricked into installing through automatic installations of free software. I never saw a trojan, keylogger, or anything serious on a computer with Sophos but I did see some pretty bad viruses on other computers. So I genuinely do believe that Sophos is an excellent antivirus program.

(Sep 17, 2015 08:59 PM)Iggaming Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) What's the difference between a firewall and the antivirus?

Antivirus works to prevent malicious programs from running and to stop malicious processes or services if they are running. This usually, like in the case of Sophos, includes web protection for things like java drivebys and fake updates. A firewall is like a barrier between your computer and the internet. For traffic to reach your computer, it has to meet your firewall's security standards.

I have gotten it install on both Windows Server 2008 and 2012 without any problems. The installer says Windows 2000/XP and I have tested it myself on XP, Vista, 7, 8, 10, and server 2008 and 2012. I would say it will work on any Windows-based OS that is 2000 or newer.

It is $19.99 for an installer with no limits on it. You can use the installer on any number of any computers you want and it will never check for a license. The program will never expire. It will still be able to perform updates without any problems.

I've always thought Sophos was really good. I used to sell it when I was a staples technician and the customers we sold it to never caught anything worse than mild adware. I also found this on a site that reviewed a slightly different version of Sophos: "In the latest AV-Test for Sophos endpoint security and control, Sophos recognized 94 percent of zero-day malware and 100 percent of known malware." Honestly I'd say that's as good as it realistically gets. Plus if you buy it for a friend you could still use it too if you wanted since there's no installation limits.

Should an owner of a crypter whose job is to bypass anti-viruses, know the answer to that question? ?

CommanderBoss - September 22, 2015, 3:44 pm

I can tell you from personal experience that Sophos is hard to bypass. It scans every hour using only about 100 Mb of memory, and scans the memory too. It also performs heuristic analyses. Even when bypassed initially, connections tend to only last a few minutes at most.

Thank you, and you're right. Staples is the only place you can get and you don't get an installer ever. You have to leave it overnight and a tech generates a license for 1 or 2 years ($100 or $160) and installs it for you. If you ever get a new computer, you need to come in to the store and the license released and transferred. I know all this because I used to work there. You don't have to deal with any of that BS with my installer.

(Sep 24, 2015 05:26 PM)Impacts Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) I'm interested in this installer. Does it generate codes how does it work?

It doesn't generate codes. This is an administrator only version of the program that installs without needing a license key. It lasts forever and the installer file can be used over and over again on any number of Windows-based computers. And yes, it still updates.

If you look at it, the ones that "detect" it are pretty obscure. The big ones like Avast, Kaspersky, Eset, Symantec, Malwarebytes, and even Sophos all say that it is clean. It must be false positives. It might be because of the way the executable is packed.

I never said it was made by Sophos for internal use and it is not the same installer Montclair gives to their students. This version was made by Sophos for use on Montclair's administrative servers. Montclair has a deal with Sophos and they recently signed a 20 year contract for protection of their internal servers. That is why this version has no installation restrictions.

Sophos endpoint is controlled by a cloud management console that you have to login to activate computers ect. <https://cloud.sophos.com/login>

That's what makes the endpoint so nice because you can see every notification, threat, banned website, event, and so on that happens on every computer it is installed on.

Just a FYI for everyone. Sophos by default blocks hackforums and its a bitch to allow blocked websites through their filters. It is on the other hand, one of the best endpoint solutions available.

I'm not sure only because this version has no activation component or license key to go with it. So if you were to try to activate it through the cloud it probably wouldn't work.

Do you have a firewall or other antivirus program on your computer? It really is supposed to update like it does on my computer. There must be a problem with your installation for some reason. Give me a minute and I'll post a picture of it working on my computer.

Update:

Spoiler (Click to View)

As you can see, mine updated today and is using the correct update path (Montclair's update server). I bet that you installed the program by going to where the installer extracts the files, C:\ESXP\ and running the setup from there. If you do that, the program will not update correctly. What you have to do now is remove Sophos through control panel, restart, and install the program by just hitting next on the sophos installer executable until it is done. You are never supposed to install it through C:\ESXP\ which I admit I should have clarified. After doing this, it will perform initial updates on its own until its done. After that point it is fully installed and configured to update on its own in the future.

To configure scheduled scanning, first right click on the Sophos icon on the taskbar and click "Open Sophos Endpoint Security and Control." Then click "scans" followed by "Set up a new scan." Check off what you want scanned (everything I'm assuming but it's customization). Then click "enable schedule." You will then be able to check off days and set times for the scan to run. There is also a username and password field but that can be left at the default unless you are running it on a limited account or something and need the admin password for UAC.

There are multiple even big antiviruses that do this.

I'm really not sure how to respond to that other than the fact that not one person has reported anything along those lines. And if antivirus are all botnets anyway like you claim, then it really wouldn't matter which one you picked in that regard. Not that the version I'm selling is backfired, because it's absolutely not.

Make sure your current antivirus is Uninstalled (especially if it has a Firewall), and also make sure you install it to the default location.

Hope this helped.

Just purchased works fine, Please note though this is not a Sophos Employee Version it is a version that they may have given to an administrator or a collage or the collage have put the files together themselves as the customer id is in a text document and the installer uses this id to install the software.The software is from an american college but i do not want to name the college here and it connects to there own url for the updates.

So this project works perfect and i am very happy with the purchase but there is a chance updates could stop at some point in the future as it is connecting to the edu site for updates and it is using there customer number.

Thanks

Yes, you are absolutely correct. I worked for the company and this installer was made for a specific American university for internal use (it is not the same version that students are given). They signed a 20 year contract just over a year ago, and a client's customer ID number does not change unless their contract expires and they fail to sign a new one within a certain amount of time. So it will definitely update for years to come. I'm glad to see that you are happy with your purchase ?

The fact that the torrent version won't update unless some dedicated pirate hacks the Sophos server every day and copies the new definitions to his private offshore update server. So you can get the program via torrent and without paying but it's essentially useless.

CommanderBoss - March 2, 2016, 5:23 pm

(Mar 2, 2016 02:09 AM)Sobriety Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) How good is Sophos compared to Avira?

I would say that Sophos is better and here's why. Sophos is comparable to Malwarebytes Pro, which is excellent. Sophos is a managed antivirus program, meaning it handles everything for you including automatic background scans. It has all the features you would want like web protection and rootkit detection. The premium version protects from rootkits and web threats (for $44.99 a year as of now) but the free version only does web protection if you install an annoying toolbar. My version of Sophos is cheaper than Avira premium, has more features, and is lifetime.

Then click on "Configure anti-virus and HIPS." Click "on-access scanning" and uncheck "Enable on-access scanning for this computer." Recheck it to turn protection back on.

I suppose, although Sophos from me would be cheaper than renewing Malwarebytes at $50 a year for 3 computers, unless you just have one computer with lifetime on it from back when they still offered it.
