It will be more likely due to keywords than a browser exploit.

Just for future reference: Your computer can't be infected via Javascript. You might have been thinking of Java.

Sterling674 - April 12, 2015, 1:37 pm

Woah, that's pretty cool dude, I wish i could do stuff like that.

That is just bullshit. just look at all the browser code execution exploits from pwn2own

And not one is executed via Javascript. The worst you can do with JS is redirect to a page which does have a browser exploit :)

..and

PHP Code

<?php

<http://olivivien.com/>

Yo ..why you be holding out on us man? Thought we were all friends here. ?

btw..?

PHP Code

<?php

<http://www.ircpl.com.sg/admin/index.php>

Quote:Username: '=' 'or'

Password: '=' 'or'

Anyway nice job, next time don't destroy the Index.html/php to get your point across, just create a new directory to host your deface page.

Reason: say "goodbye" to your shell. lol

asm-99 - April 12, 2015, 3:14 pm

You can exploit flaws in the javascript interpreter itself.... see for example here: <https://www.mozilla.org/en-US/security/advisories/mfsa2015-29/>

jorgo6 - April 12, 2015, 11:16 pm
