It depends on the network you're trying to scrape but on average, you can scrape ~1000 usernames in about 10-20 seconds.

All of the sites are pure usernames. There are many sites that allow you to use a username instead of email. For those that don't, that is up to you to decide what you want to do with the usernames.

It gives you a list of account usernames that has been already made by people. With the list, you can use an account cracker to try to crack into accounts.

It just simply formats the list as USER:PASS format but puts the pass as the same as username. This is useful for people trying to crack accounts since many people have their password the same as their username.
