Thread: How can I automatically monitor a facebook profile?

PureLifeCoding - April 27, 2015, 8:05 am

How can I monitor a facebook profile? I have the login for it and I want to add something maybe, I don't know. Ideas? The person using the account is not on the same computer. Is there an app I could give privileges that would monitor and send me logs or something? WITHOUT THEM KNOWING.

Best thing that I could recommend is a key logger or better yet a RAT. Some RATs (remote administration tool) have an API (Application Programming Interface) that you can write scripts for. You could write a script that activates when the user logs into facebook with their specific credentials, and start a screen capture session, then send the recording upon logout over FTP. It would take work, but this is the best way I know of that I could recommend. I don't think any RAT has this specific feature. Take a look at Nanocore. It might have what you need.

Yea but the thing is my target only has access to Facebook on his tablet.

Depends, if you have access to the tablet aswell, you can install an android rat there, such as droid eye and droid jack ,and you can do alot of things with those, i'm not sure if that's what you need

EDIT: A BRILLIANT IDEA CAME ON MY Head!!!! , Anyways, you can make a fake applicaton from your facebook , and give it all piverllages, such as seeing messsages,pictures and everything ,then go on your victim , activate the app, and here you go , you can go to dev.fb.com and view what he says and stuff, i saw a vid about this few years ago, will find it and send to you soon.
