Kogan - April 29, 2015, 4:44 am

GreyShades

The unexpected, expected.

BlackShades reborn, today, we introduce GreyShades.

- Remote Administration Tool(s) (RAT)
- Keylogger(s)
- HTTP, IRC and TOR Botnet(s)
- Crypter(s)
- Rootkit(s)
- Traffic

GreyShades will reinvent and revolutionize the market with features like centralized support, tiers of software, stable and well coded products all bundled with software that just works out of the box!

Products

Product information will be released as we "go"; check back on this thread frequently.

GreyShades RAT (lite)

"Say Hello to GreyShades"

A lite, cost effective and stable variant of our GreyShades RAT suite. The same features we've all grown to love at an affordable price all bundled with our fanatical centralized support available to you 24 hours a day, 7 days a week. All of our products include lifetime support and are priced only at a one-time-fee (lifetime) of the product.

ALPHA: 01/07/2015 - Due to unforeseen circumstances, we may have an Alpha build by the 5th of May.

BETA: 01/08/2015

RELEASE: 01/09/2015

Coming soon

Private Network - April 29, 2015, 4:46 am

Marketing scheme's, marketing schemes everywhere.

Using name's and the hype of other products, making people tempted with [Coming Soon] prefix.

Anyways, not hating.

If this RAT is generally as good as BlackShades I wish you the best of luck and GLWS!

HIGH PAID FELLA - April 29, 2015, 4:47 am

I'm pretty sure you will not be able to have as 'good' products like Stev did.

The coders will be utilizing a variety of languages including but not limited to Python, AutoIT, .Net and C#.

If you're inquiring about the RAT specifically - the coding structure is primarily composed of .Net and C#.

Yeah, don't bother mentioning anything else about the RAT, the languages you posted? I can already tell this will be a disaster.

Kogan - April 29, 2015, 5:14 am

These products are not marketed in any way for commercial usage for "professionals" (not taking into account the botnets)

Your theory is interesting about dependencies (netframework);

Windows 8 and 8.1 is bundled with all editions of NFW.

Windows 7 is bundled with NFW 1.0, 1.1, 2.0, 3.0 and 3.5.

Windows Vista and XP includes NFW 1.0 and 2.0.

Windows Server flavors generally include NFW 2.0+

The coding (for the RAT flavors specifically) is a mixture of a few languages, dependencies generally will not affect product quality, stability or user experience.

As a result of poor coding practices experienced commonly with HF products, we hope to set a new bar in terms of quality, stability, user experience and customer sanctification.

Thank you for your inquiry.

What you conduct with purchased software is your own responsibility. We will further elaborate on this with our EULA for any specific product queries you may have.

As any other business entity, we do indeed comply and cooperate with any law enforcement requests for information. In our specific location we don't directly cooperate with the FBI.

I sell software with a .NET dependency. But, you show a complete lack of knowledge regarding your own products.

Windows XP does not come pre-installed with .NET 2.0, it is installed via Windows Update. Also, Windows 8/8.1/10 comes with .NET 4.5. Does not have full backwards computability with .NET 2.0.

I don't do the actual coding for the products but am well versed with the structure of them and the languages used.

I suggest you look into THIS.

Without going to deep here, there are numerous ways to make dependencies universal across most operating systems.

As I've said before, most .NET products on HF are of extremely low quality and have given the language a very bad name.

Thank you for your inquiry. I had to install 2.0 on Windows 7 and then had to upgrade just to use catalyst control centre...

KFC Watermelon - April 29, 2015, 7:58 am

I work with .NET software within an XP, 7, and 8 virtualized (non-updated) machine everyday. You must install .NET 3.5 on Windows 8 for 2.0 unless you specify 4.5 backwards comparability support within your app.config file.

(Apr 29, 2015 07:55 AM)Alex™ Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) I had to install 2.0 on Windows 7 and then had to upgrade just to use catalyst control centre...

3.5 comes with Windows 7 SP0 which is fully backwards compatible with 2.0. Windows 8 comes with 4.5 which is not fully backwards compatible with 2.0. You need to adjust your app.config file to allow for backwards comparability with 4.5.

Catalyst may be 4.X which does not come with Windows 7.

I'm not trying to be rude or hateful at all, but I do want people to be informed on this subject. There is tons of misinformation spread around hackforums.

Kinda dumb to advertise your RAT with a well known, but TERRIBLY put together piece of software like Blackshades, public "hacking" forums were full of people crying about 80% of their functions not working at all.

Regardless, I wish you the best of luck.

But keep in mind, Blackshades only had the "success" it had because it was one of the few RATs around during their prime time, and they knew how to advertise.

Wafflemonger - April 29, 2015, 8:32 am

Probably not the best way to market a product if it is anything similar to Blackshades, otherwise I fully expect to see OP behind bars within a few months as well as half their users. Hi Viking_;

It's excellent to see you pop up in the thread about your issues with BlackShades. With GreyShades, we will be utilizing a central form of support and communication for clients that have purchased software with us, this will allow us to mobilize extremely quickly (remove, add and administrate our staff with ease) and of-course provide high quality support for end-users.

You've raised a valid and significant issue, what happens after we have a few hundred support tickets to deal with a day? How do we resolve this issue without increasing costs? We have targeted plans and training for staff to ensure the highest quality standards are always met. Most products on HF will not utilize real staff or proper management software, we will. In saying that, we also have a number of methods to tackle providing high quality support with minimal resources at affordable end-user prices.

I think customer service is one of our highest priorities to be honest with you.

BlackShades did indeed have an extraordinary amount of potential, only to see the owner of the software decide to entangle himself with fraud.

I've decided that it's most suitable to release a free build of GreyShades Lite to showcase our features to the community, bring some integrity to the table and show the community what we're really capable of.

Bear in mind that it will be a lite version (lots of features locked or stripped out) and free version, no support will be provided and it's an Alpha build so we expect to see some bugs.
