Thread: Your opinion of hottest anime girls?

Super Gogeta - May 2, 2015, 8:18 am

My list would be :

Kagome [shes bae]

Bulma [teen bulma was hottest]

Nami

Kikyo was also pretty hot.

XoxT - May 2, 2015, 8:48 am

Kikyo is!!! Yessssss! :3 Hahaha

Hmm, Rias from High School DxD. Or Kurumu from Rosario Vampire.

Ah fuck.. Or Sena from Haganai...

ZYZZ BRAHHH - May 2, 2015, 9:18 pm

Piccolo was fucking hot same with krillin.

Houtarou - May 2, 2015, 9:34 pm

I think my favorite girls would be:

Rias (HighSchool DxD)
Asuna (Sword Art Online)
Utaha (Saenai Heroine no Sodatekata)
Yukino (My Teen Romantic Comedy SNAFU)

Just personal opinion of course.

No they are not...

First, to start, Cartoons are a more European/American type of anime, they use a different art style that sometimes strays away from human features (ie characters being extremely skinny, extremely short, not even having legs like south park etc.) not only that but Cartoons are usually targetting exclusively audience focused in comedy, obviously, there are a few cartoons that don't follow the rule.

Anime is Japanese almost exclusively, it tries to replicate human features as much as possible and doesn't have any particular demography to target.

Feel free to prove me wrong though

PS: Forgot to mention most cartoons are episodic while most anime are not and anime usually has a more realistic feel in both plot and character personalities

Even though it's entirely off-topic, Anime is a cartoon.

You can try to argue otherwise, however, Anime is simply a cartoon made in a certain style. Just like there are different types of art, (impressionism, abstract, etc) there are different types of cartoon art. Anime is one of them.

Cartoon $\neq$ Anime

Different types of painting styles are still only considered Art you never hear someone say that a certain style is another style just because it has certain similarities to it.

Just likes soaps are different from CSI/other type of tv shows and are not judged in the same category.

Same applies to cartoons and anime, there's similarities and there's also plenty of difference.

I can tell you several more examples.

Yes, but CSI and soap ops are both TV shows, like Death Note and Spongebob are both cartoons.

They're both illustrated animations. I honestly don't care what way you put it, however, if you enjoy anime or not, it's simply a fact that anime and other cartoons are both cartoons, the only difference is the art style.

If you want to go ahead and explain how they're different, go ahead and do so. All you've done is say they're different, not how they are.

Literally the only difference is the region it was made in. They're cartoons made in Japan and other Asian regions. Anime is simply the Japanese shortening the word animation, which is the exact same thing as what a cartoon is. They have different art styles, cultural references, languages, etc, however, that's to be expected, as they're made to fit their local demographic, however, just like my earlier reference, you can instantly tell the difference between a Japanese painting and an American one, but they're both still a painting.

(May 24, 2015 08:21 PM)Egith_yee Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Anime is not a Japanese cartoon.

Cartoons were usually meant to be goofy and poorly drawn/animated.

Anime usually derived manga and are meant to have a plot, more detailed drawings/animation, and different genres aimed at different audiences.

It's way more detailed than being labeled as a cartoon.

At first glance it may just seem like a simple Japanese cartoon, but it really depends what anime you seen as well.

There are lots of great anime out there with great artwork and plots. There are also lots of anime with the opposite.

I'm not saying they're the same thing. That's not my point. They obviously have their differences, however, they're both still a cartoon. A cartoon is a vague term, and Anime is simply a more specific one.

Look at an American painting and a Japanese painting. They're both quite different, yes?

But they're both a painting.

With your edit, I can see where it's coming from, and I agree to an extent. That's the origin of cartoons, however, it's not as they are now.

Here's another definition for a cartoon: A "motion picture using animation techniques to photograph a sequence of drawings rather than real people or objects in an exaggerated way."

Can you explain how anime doesn't fall into that definition? Also, can you explain the fine differences? If you do, I won't be stubborn, and I'll agree if it's logical.

'an??ma/

a style of Japanese film and television animation, typically aimed at adults as well as children.

I do see your reasoning. Just the nature of anime itself. I, as well as many people, I'd assume, think of anime with the adult target audience. Yes, things such as Family Guy could be brought in to counter that, but I see anime, usually, as a more mature cartoon. In my mind, relating to painting, Cartoons are watercolor, while anime is more of a latex or oil paint. Some children use, but the majority are a more mature audience. This is just how I view it.

That is not necessarily true. Take Samurai Jack for example, an American made cartoon that was heavily influenced by western art style. But guess what? It's still a cartoon.

I did say sometimes, it's still episodic like almost all cartoons and its representation of a human (MC) is still nowhere near as "real" as most anime.

Regardless of where you look, Cartoons always tend to either exaggerate with their art /and or personalities/ (simpsons, south park, etc) or never try to go for a detailed/real look on the characters of the show.

Anime on the other hand, no matter where you look 99% of anime have main characters that resemble far more a human being than those of cartoons, be it in terms of not exaggerating (no one has 10 meter long arms or legs, or no one has no legs, etc), or be it in terms of personality which is some of the anime main points. (Atleast of this decade)

Plus there's still the episodic factor.

I'm sure if I looked I could find plenty of cartoons that do not exaggerate with their art or personalities and I'm sure I could find even more anime where the characters' designs or personalities do not resemble that of a real human

For example, most anime characters have outrageously over-sized eyes for whatever reason. That doesn't resemble any human being that I've ever seen

Feel free to find some of those cartoons, perhaps you're right but from my own experience I've never seen one that didn't fit in the traits I posted above, and I'm sure that you also agree with me when I do say that cartoon and anime are quite different in terms of style, target audience, & the overall different type of anime you see in the west & east.

That's true however it's also true that it kind of fits the face of the anime characters, and if you look behind the reasoning on why it's like that it's probably because of how hard it would be to actually replicate real life eyes hence why most artists back in the day simply started drawing like that which probably made it become a part of their unique style, something you do not usually see in cartoons.

PS: It's not uncommon to find incredibly unproportional eyes in anime from 1990's however from what I've seen in the last few years it's becoming more and more proportional, while also the art keeps on improving.

But like in everything, there's always exceptions, surely there's also some anime that fits in the cartoons characteristics, just like perhaps there are also some cartoons that fit in the anime characteristics, but speaking in terms of the overall large volumes of anime & cartoon in the market the differences are still quite clear in average.

Off the top my head, Archer comes to mind. It's antics are kinda over the top but the characters designs are extremely realistic and the series is far from episodic. Also, taking away their superpowers (even though countless anime contain characters with super-human abilities) almost any superhero cartoon i.e. Batman or Spiderman also have realistic character designs

I don't agree with that at all. Yes, the art style is different but that's because theses two mediums originate from different localities. As for the target audience, that depends entirely on who it was written for. Both can be written for children but they can also be written for adults. It's not like one medium strictly adheres to a certain target audience.

One last thing, take the Legend of Korra for example, or any of the Avatar series. This TV series was created in the US and is a cartoon but since it was heavily influenced by western art styles and motifs, most people believe that it is in fact an anime. Why would they believe this if the two mediums aren't so similar that they could be considered one in the same?

(May 30, 2015 01:52 PM)angel. Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Off the top my head, Archer comes to mind. It's antics are kinda over the top but the characters designs are extremely realistic and the series is far from episodic. Also, taking away their superpowers (even though countless anime contain characters with super-human abilities) almost any superhero cartoon i.e. Batman or Spiderman also have realistic character designs

I don't agree with that at all. Yes, the art style is different but that's because these two mediums originate from different localities. As for the target audience, that depends entirely on who it was written for. Both can be written for children but they can also be written for adults. It's not like one medium strictly adheres to a certain target audience.

One last thing, take the Legend of Korra for example, or any of the Avatar series. This TV series was created in the US and is a cartoon but since it was heavily influenced by western art styles and motifs, most people believe that it is in fact an anime. Why would they believe this if the two mediums aren't so similar that they could be considered one in the same?

Super powers are irrelevant since they are just extras, they are not part of the design or the person's personality.

Archer is one of the few cartoons that actually tries hard to resemble a human like anime tries to, now look at the ratio cartoon / anime that tries to resemble humans, you'll notice a massive % difference.

Same applies for the target audience if you check the target audiences you'll also notice a large % difference between them (although not as large as the one above)

Because they actually tried to replicate the characteristics that are in a cartoon?

A Soap where people die & there are investigators trying to find out who killed who doesn't turn a soap show into a CSI show, same applies to cartoon / anime, one can try to imitate the other in certain aspects but fundamentally they are still different.

(May 30, 2015 01:52 PM)ItzVictory Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Disregarding massive eyes, breasts, small mouths, nearly nonexistent noses and weird hair colors, right? Not mentioning things like tails, overly mature looking teens and the such. Animes are constantly exaggerating Japan's ideals into their cartoons.

You're comparing small details over big details that I spoke of (bodyparts of which breasts that big aren't that hard to find in real life, probably not as frequently as in anime but it's still easy to find big breasted people lol) not only that but most of those not even that exaggerated, if you look at most anime character faces (by most I mean if you take a large portion of the anime and compare their faces) you'll see that the majority actually have decently proportionate faces and don't stick out as much as someone with extremely long arms/legs or someone with a huge head, or not even having legs, etc

PS: The moment there are tails involved it's no longer trying to imitate a human.

Closest you'd get there would be hair color. People dye their hair.

This is taken from an average anime, as have my other images.

You're only taking the pictures you see fit. Search anime in Google images and you'll see my point.

Also, visit Japan in real life. Those hair colors are a severe exaggeration. Also, even in those images provided, those eyes are exceptionally big. The only one that looks remotely realistic is this one:

Also, I see what you did. Besides that last one where you're trying to semi-agree with me, you're only using males. The girls are much more exaggerated, and you know that. The guys/adults are usually more accurate than the adolescent girls.

I'm not going to further my argument any more though, as we're derailing this thread.

I'm surprised by this too. In all other anime related forums you'd normally see Hitagi Senjougahara usually the top contender. Maybe too many people here watching mainstream anime to notice the hidden gems.

Senjougahara at her finest in first season.

She becomes a secondary character at best after bakemonogatari, not only that but her relationship with Araragi is meh at best, there's better choices imo.

Not to mention that reddit and other anime related communities have serious trouble reading a poll properly.
