I think it looks good, very simple but clean nice job.

T0SH1 - May 17, 2015, 10:26 pm

it looks nice..

but does it double exposure ? i think its more look like a layer mask?

anw, good adidas you got there! haha

deiski - May 17, 2015, 10:28 pm

Looks nice, all though incredibly easy to make.

Not sure why you have "Double Exposure" as the title, just looks like layer masking to me.

It mimics a double exposure effect , but yeah you're right it does use layer masking

Looks sick man

Super clean

Personally id add a slight stroke to it or something (inner stroke) to make it standout more

but I cant quite tell how that might look atm

Yeah, it's pretty basic I guess, but its minimalistic in other words, I like it though, not bad.

However, I don't like how you use photography/cinematography terms for graphics, double exposure or multiple exposure has always been a pure photography technique where you take the photos in camera. I mean yeah nowadays there's only few people who still do this in camera with 35mm film etc but I just don't like merging the 2 haha.

Soz for ranting xoxo

Yeah , sorry about that .. I called it that mostly b/c of my lack of knowledge in that field , I just saw someone calling it by that previously so I just went by that a rounded font and a squared logo isnt appealing

ZeSilentNinja - May 19, 2015, 5:04 am

I think it looks really nice! Did you put any effects on the photo you have used? If I was going to change anything then maybe something with the text. I'm not sure if its the font or because its lower case but it doesn't quite fit in my opinion. Looks good though. Simple but effective.

It's pretty simple and surprisingly a big hit.

Duplicate the layer, make cuts on the duplicated layer, duplicate the cut layer until you have three, double click one and check the red box, then green on another, then blue on the last, move them with the arrow keys
