Thread: THE MUST KNOW technique to an attractive thread title!

Velocity™ - May 23, 2015, 4:15 am

There are many ways to create an attractive thread title and doing this has a viral effect on your thread, it can increase your readership and their trust, your thread content will be shared to many other readers which automatically makes your thread get popular, but how do you create an attractive title? I'll be sharing with you some ways to accomplish this?

How to create an attractive title:

Make it short

The longer your thread title, the more boring it will be. Readers are found of skimming through thread titles before they click, try to make your thread title a short but tempting title that readers can't resist, this will grab their attention. A thread with a long title will only get you few amount of readers and won't grab much attention. On one of my best thread post "I'm tired of posting – fed up" I just love that title, the little mistake I made was not promoting it well.

Make it sweet

You'll need to sugarcoat your thread title and don't forget to add some honey too. Create an attractive thread title by putting yourself in your readers shoes and thinking of a thread title that you can't resist to click. You can write down a list of titles to use then choose the best out of the thread titles. The flavor on "how to generate traffic to your blog" is no longer sweet and tasty, I won't be tempted to click (even if it has an excellent content) because it's a common blog title and it can be found all over the blogosphere, but if I should see something like "how I got 5000 visitors in 10 seconds" I will be so curious to know how possible this is, think of the difference.

Avoid baiting your visitors

Most users trick their readers in to reading something far different from the title of the thread post. It's very wrong to do this, I can even say it's illegal. Tricking your readers has a negative effect on your thread, you're not only building a bad reputation for yourself but you're also buying off the trust your readers have for you, this will make them leave your thread and don't expect them to come back to your posts because they wouldn't want to be tricked the second time. Create an attractive thread title and let your content go according to what your thread title is saying.

This was NOT created by me, I just edited it with the word "thread" XD

I thought it would help some of you in making just the right title for some threads ^-^
