Let's face it, gambling relies on you winning in order to take more from you in the long run. First you win lots, then you spend a small amount and lose it. Then you lose more and more and more. You get the picture. Cash out and never return! Unless it's poker, a lot of the time that relies on more skill than chance; unless it's online then it's pretty much all maths.

Rhetorical question: If you wanted to advertise your site and get loads of attention, wouldn't you make out that one person was doing really well financially from it? I bet their traffic has increased dramatically since this started.

But, nice work if this really is you and you do have a genuine workaround. I should add, your Terence screen dump above proves nothing, I could change mine to say that.

Extrapolate - August 15, 2015, 3:01 pm

So I have a question about SM...when you bet say 1,000,000 bits....you get a card say youre playing 1 mine click once and cashout do you get your original bet and the money you won back or is the 1,000,000 for the board you're playing and it goes away and you only get the winnings? Because if you get your bet and your winnings then you can easily play 1000 boards of 1 mine worth 1,000,000bits and make 40m bits

You get back your original bet and winnings. It would be retarded if you had to pay money for each bet like that, you'd lose money way too fast.
