There's definitely FBI or something similar watching HF, look at the name of the site "Hack" forums. But because Omni has restricted blackhat activity, and doesn't allow fraud, carding,etc... I'm sure its not #1 on there priority list.

This one is interesting. Some guys from DHS are here for more than five years. ?

Hazy - June 26, 2015, 10:56 pm

Omni has stated a few times feds are on the forums.

<https://hackforums.net/showthread.php?tid=474743>

The new site Omni was talking about was a honeypot.

Quote:Nearly a year ago HF was placed for sale. I had a buyer willing to pay me a reasonable price for the site. The final terms of the sale were not to my satisfaction and not in the best interests of this community. While a sale never did finalize a type of partnership agreement did surface. I am now going to implement my part of the agreement which is promote his new site. It should be of no surprise it's a black hat site. When I learned the buyer wanted to make HF black hat I had decided to turn down his offer. Our new arrangement is fairly simple and straightforward. Activity we don't want at HF is going to be directed toward his site. What goes on there will not be related to what you do here. You'll need to register and agree to their TOS.

Some new rules will be placed at HF shortly to further restrict certain activity here. The end goal will be to clean up much of the site and push it towards its more original purpose of being a computer enthusiast site. HF was never meant to be the place it has become. It's attracted certain elements I find highly undesirable.

Effective immediately is no discussions about Zeus. It was brought to my attention how this tool is used strictly for stealing financial data. I'll be opening a Zeus subforums under Botnets, moving all threads, and locking it. Anyone discussing Zues will get a Financial Fraud warning and their thread moved. Eventually that subforum will be deleted entirely.

One way we hope to direct members toward the new site is from warnings. When you are warned for certain activity you'll get a PM automatically asking you to join the new site and not continue having discussions on HF on that topic.

The new site will also require a referral from me or m4v3r1ck who is the admin there. All memberships will have to be manually approved on that site. You can PM him here to ask for referral. All ub3r and l33t can get a VIP membership automatically on that site.

I'm sure this post will raise a lot of questions and I'll do my best to provide answers. You might consider this the end of HF but I consider it a new beginning. I'll have other very wonderful and positive news to give members in the coming weeks. I'll continue to improve HF and make our community even stronger.

PM m4v3r1ck HERE

Thank you.

Ah of course.

There was a guy named Maverick (or something similar with numbers n shit) and he was basically allowed in by Omniscent and Omniscent let him lure people to his "blackhat" website that condoned carding, and whatever illegal shit you can think of. They actually made some arrests.

Omniscent set him up, gave him ub3r, and made him look trusted and it all went downhill from there.

Okay, but think of it this way; if you were a team leader for an surveillance operation for unlawful hacking, would you not invest some time here? I think it would be pretty naive not to. Of course it's against the rules for a lot of blackhat methods: eg: phishing, carding. But what about the people with botnets and the ones which hack in to emails? Like I said, if you were in charge of an operation it would be silly not to devote some resources here.

Tony S - June 27, 2015, 6:21 am

I don't think so.

The majority of the forum's user base consists of unskilled teenage nobodies who don't pose a threat to anyone or anything substantial.

Despite the word "hack" being present in the domain name, which a lot of you have senselessly used as an argument as to why the forums could be getting monitored, most of the activity on the forum revolves around general tech, gaming, and life discussions. Oh, and marketing.

You people sure do love your ebooks. Even in the dedicated "hacking" sections, the overwhelming majority of the contributors are untalented script kiddies, who again, pose no threat to anyone or anything substantial.

What could someone possibly gain out of actively monitoring a community like that? Why would someone waste time and resources doing so?
