It is as simple as this!

1. import proxies
2. scrape usernames
3. then import the Username list & Password list and boom! it starts cracking.____

was able to crack some Reddit accounts in minutes!

I think with this tool, you can crack a lot of Reddit accounts!

It works good, simple GUI! no strange errors, just a simple program

That works like a fucking charm, will be using this alot!

I'm kind of interested, it looks good but my only problem is everytime i buy one of these things the creator ends up giving up on the product.

I'd do a vouch copy or I'll just keep waiting to see more reviews on this. Good job though man!

I love how every cracker "demonstration" video always uses an account they already own and is easy to crack because they put the password in their list.

Even with a really simple password it takes millions (if not billions) of tries to get a working account, this does 1 every 5 seconds or so.

Yeah good luck getting an actual account in less than 15 years.

It's to show it works. But yeah, I agree. They should show you how many attempts it took and how many seconds.

(Jul 24, 2015 09:54 AM)Tyranitar Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) It's to show it works. But yeah, I agree. They should show you how many attempts it took and how many seconds.

The average password length is 8, and consists of alphanumeric characters both upper and lower case.

So $62^8 = 218,340,105,584,896$ possible combinations.

The video showed that this does 1 account ever 5 seconds or so.

$218,340,105,584,896 \div 5 = 1,091,700,527,924,480$ seconds.

That's $1,091,700,527,924,480 \div 60 \div 60 \div 24 \div 365 = 34,617,596.6$ years to get a match.

Now that's using random numbers, this uses a password list.

Most password lists are a billion or so passwords long.

That's $1,000,000,000 \div 5 = 5,000,000,000$ seconds.

Which is $5,000,000,000 / 60 / 60 / 24 / 365 = 158.54896$ years.

As much as I want to agree with you, there are lists of the 10,000 most commonly used passwords.

(Jul 24, 2015 10:06 AM)Tyranitar Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) As much as I want to agree with you, there are lists of the 10,000 most commonly used passwords.

That's still 13.888... hours per account.

At the least would need to go over a couple thousand accounts before getting one that uses one of those passwords.

That's still a very very very very very long time.

Weeks of idling your PC to get a reddit account that may be active and even less likely have enough karma to be worth something.

You need to disable any antivirus or protection software you have. This is because of false positives that come up due to obfuscation and added protection to the program to prevent program cracks. You also need .NET Framework 4.5 to run the program.

Success can not be estimated since it all depends on if a password happens to be the password for account. There's an infinite amount of passwords someone can use which makes it not possible to even give a rough estimate. It's all luck.

What's the output after a correct login is found? Does it show karma?

It shows the username and password when a correct login is found. It is an account cracker, not an account checker so it does not show any account information like karma.

Op, does this work like sentry mba for cracking accounts where you put in a combo list, or are you just supposed to put in a username list and a list of common passwords? The latter seems less effective tbh.

I do not know what sentry mba is. What this cracker does is it makes direct login requests to Reddit using your list of usernames and passwords that you put in into the cracker.

Does it check if the accounts are shadow banned? Or if the account works, but its suspended and you need to reset your pw to continue using it. Does it detect that as well?
