Thread: DuckDns

N3wb Gamer - July 22, 2015, 8:37 am

So my dns was working fine and last night I couldn't use remote desktop so I decide to restart LuminosityLink. I see my clients aren't connecting. I restart my computer. Now I decide to test out my dns through LL and it isn't resolving to my IP. Next thing I try to update duckdns and now I don't own my subdomain anymore and it isn't on my account.

It's currently being resolved to 192.169.69.25 after I decided to ping my subdomain

Has anyone ever had this issue before?

Whois the IP:

Private Customer 192-169-69-16-28-STEALTHYHOSTING (NET-192-169-69-16-1) 192.169.69.16 - 192.169.69.31

Stealthy Hosting STEALTHY-HOSTING-IPV4-NET1 (NET-192-169-68-0-1) 192.169.68.0 - 192.169.71.255

EDIT: http to this ip = Honeypot <http://192.169.69.25/ui/login/?next=%2F>

Do you recommend any other dns services?

Rikanono - July 22, 2015, 9:06 am i do not recomend dns in any way.

i mean its easy to get your dns name when a honeypot or any other av company get your stub. all they have to do is contact duckdns or dyndns or no.ip and tell them. they will close your account and u lose all slaves.

also they could conntact your isp and get you... but its to much work for a little RAT boys like us^^. if you dont do high criminal stuff like blackshades you should be fine.

DuckDNS seems to have either gone rogue or has been taken over.
