Thread: [\[DuckDNS & Deployment of MHN\] ABANDON USE OF DUCKDNS - Updated: July 31 2015](#)

Armada - July 22, 2015, 9:52 am

Starting today I noticed a starting trend of threads happening

[\[MUST READ \] Weird DuckDNS subdomain takeover DuckDNS](#)

It was the mention of the Modern Honeypot Network Server that caught my attention and investigation in to this a little bit.

It would appear as though either Duck DNS themselves or another entity has deployed a Threats Management Server known as "MHN" - Modern Honeypot Network. an open source threat analytic interface and audit solution.

[Video: <https://vimeo.com/98581051>]

Description:

Multi-snort and honeypot sensor management, uses a network of VMs, small footprint SNORT installations, stealthy dionaeas, and a centralized server for management.

Spoiler \(Click to View\)HONEYPOT

Deployed sensors with intrusion detection software installed: Snort, Kippo, Conpot, and Dionaea.

MANAGEMENT SERVER

Flask application that exposes an HTTP API that honeypots can use to:

Download a deploy script

Connect and register

Download snort rules

Send intrusion detection logs

It also allows systems administrators to:

View a list of new attacks

Manage snort rules: enable, disable, download

Source and Source Code

It would appear as though these are deployed honeypots to determine the type of traffic being passed through these subdomains.

All users would be advised to abandon use of DuckDNS and/or accounts associated to the registration of the DNS service.

CONFIRMED

DuckDNS is taking proactive steps to reduce malware being passed through its services: Source

POINT OF NOTE:

Dont go posting this to their social wall.. that is just stupid. C'mon guys.

Analysis of designated IP#

- Pointed IP# appears to be the central management consoles interface.

Minimal exposure, but should not be on exterior of DuckDNS network.

\\4th Update

(Jul 31, 2015 01:50 AM)geezus Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) How exactly is jumping ship to another free dns provider going to help?

Nobody uses backup DNS after the NO-IP bullsh1t?!?!?

When no-ip went down everyone migrated to duckdns, so using freedns will only delay your fate.

Ive been using duckdns and all my domains are in that list.

changeip = banned

freedns =banned

duckdns =honeypot

no-ip =honeypot

I think its safe to say that if your going to be doing anything criminal it might be a good idea to invest in some OPSEC and use your own DNS.

Think of it like a botnet do you use free hosting that can be banned/shutdown/reported easily.....NO SO go the extra mile and buy a cheap vps to setup your own DNS

Here is an update client that works with a large number of DynDNS providers.

LSDoom - July 22, 2015, 9:55 am

Thanks for sharing this. Will definitely get rid of my DuckDNS account and client.

QU?CKSILVER - July 22, 2015, 10:08 am

Thanks for the feedback regarding their Honeynet project for analyzing new threats. PEOPLE BE AWARE, don't use this shit ever again! This situation reminds me of what happened with NoIP...

Dang it! I had put my trust in DuckDNS for over a year, but now they've just gone bitchy professoraegon - July 22, 2015, 10:22 am

Thanks for the heads up. Thats too bad as duckdns was really working great. Any suggestions on where we should be migrating?

I see a lot of people are using FreeDNS. I have no personal experience with that service though.
Stay away from NO-IP, that's all I got to say.

Could be mistaken but a lot of these Dynamic "DUC" work universally between services dont they?
I know I have seen quite a few generic codes on github for these. Might be helpful for members who are opting for these free services currently. ?

Since I have so few slaves, do you think am at risk too?

Do they take down domains with lots of suspicious requests from lots of slaves or is it automated?

My favorite is already posted in OP my "Point of note" with a HF member directly asking on Google+ why their domain got nuked.

- Look at their DNS name, and consider the following:
"These people are considered Hackers"

How exactly is jumping ship to another free dns provider going to help?

Nobody uses backup DNS after the NO-IP bullsh1t?!?!?

When no-ip went down everyone migrated to duckdns, so using freedns will only delay your fate.

Ive been using duckdns and all my domains are in that list.

changeip = banned

freedns =banned

duckdns =honeypot

no-ip =honeypot

I think its safe to say that if your going to be doing anything criminal it might be a good idea to invest in some OPSEC and use your own DNS.

Think of it like a botnet do you use free hosting that can be banned/shutdown/reported easily.....NO
SO go the extra mile and buy a cheap vps to setup your own DNS

Here is an update client that works wit a large number of DynDNS providers.

I think you may be confused.

RA4W is a VPN service, I offer a DNS service.

No VPN service as of yet, but IDK, maybe one day.
