Just a bystander here and I am noticing a few things sketchy.

Let this be known I am not sales trashing but observing this thread.

People have been asking for what is so different about the last version vs this one and nobody would respond to this question.

When asked about a feature that was listed it is completely ignored and subject is changed to another thing that is totally irrelevant.

Just by reading the post from OP he seems to not really care and is only defending in his best interest and withholding information from us.

I have looked up many cases about Stoner_ just now and EVERY thread about this seems to be that stoner himself made a very unstable botnet and did a quick scam. Even when his botnet was cracked and all proof was given he LIED about his features he claimed they were fake for a long time when it was all released.

The fact that OP has not looked into these claims and is ignoring them makes me turn an eye

As a consumer I would not touch this as it has many things that looks to be misleading and feels like customers are being lied to.

Why are you increasing price? To limit supply or what?

Since the $100 price as of now is just the "back in market" price which will be increased to its normal sell price within some days.

$200 is very much overpriced for this bot, sales will soon drop when you increase the price.

Sure.

Changelog - Ask Nex because he got a private coder to update the product. (most updates were made so that the current functions work flawlessly and the stealers were updated)

This does not have a rootkit or formgrabber yet, might be added in the future though.

Not sure how to explain how we achieve persistence, but there is indeed file/registry and process persistence.

Botkiller works on the basis of heuristics, it can detect ring3 packet hooks on other processes too. It searches for all known strings of malware and suspicious files in registry/startup/etc. I might get an Anti Ring3 Packet Hook protection added too.

Encryption - you'd have to ask with Nex, I probably think it has a Polymorphic encryption technique.

I've been fairly successful at getting crypts that execute fine with various crypters. Had a few little quirks but I'm not sure if it's due to the crypter or previous things. I loaded the files onto a few client computers of mine via LuminosityLink after running the Hard Malware Cleaner which basically destroys startup for anything besides Luminosity.

I've confirmed it executes initially with:

KazyCrypt (svchost injection)

Morpheus Protector (svchost injection)

StaticCrypter (self injection)

CryptexReborn (svchost injection)

CryptexLite (no injection)

The startup probably works fine on all of these but I can't 100% guarantee it does as my tests weren't made on 100% clean clients.

I may be able to help you crypt it if you PM me. I don't have a copy of ByteCrypter but I may still be able to help you.

You're statement is invalid.

In total, there have been 472 customers of Athena (IRC and HTTP sales combined) and the project has made a grand total of $74,975.00 USD.

383 AthenaIRC customers $100.00 = $38,300.00

Erm, the IRC is pretty simple to setup, you can do that yourself.

The bots you need to get from a botshop.

That's about it. When the bots die out, refill.

Most is pretty stable, if you have a HTTP net I'd suggest you keep them there and upload them to the IRC when you need them.

If he did so be it, the cracked versions are shit and no wonder why is instable

DamienVC - September 10, 2015, 3:25 pm

AthenaIRC has faced tons of updates since it was upgraded, the cracked version is too shitty to even be used atm. The legit version on the other hand, has all functional features

Remix - September 11, 2015, 5:12 am

You should know that IRC means Internet Relay Chat instead of Instant Relay Chat.
You did that mistake in the pricing topic.

Go to the Beginner Hacking forum please. BIZ is already cancerous enough.

Anyway though a botnet is a collection of enslaved computers under one or more masters/controllers that do the bidding of the masters ?
