Thread: make proofpics look more trustful? NO PROBLEM!

Hello guys! :D

alot of people that tries to make pictureproof (write a name on piece of paper) often hear the words "fake"

so what's the common reasons?

- *you didn't use overlay

- *you used the wrong typefont

- *you didn't put down time in it

you need to make this good from the beginning so read trough this and start over with your photoshoping

STEP NUMBER 1: use the right typefont

i suggest that you MIX segoe print and segoe script. why mix them? because alot of people write some letters together like letters with an l in front of it. now use the right size of the letters, mix the size so it looks more handwritten. in the end, click between some letters and click on alt and right arrow and left. when you do this, you will move the letters so it looks more realistic. how many people write the word "hello" with exactly 0.05mm between EVERY letter

STEP NUMBER 2: overlay

overlay is an option that comes up when you dubbleclick on the text in the layertab. you should get up a box that says "layer style" in the blendingoption, you should find something called "overlay". use this to make the text look like it's on the paper.

STEP NUMBER 3: stroke

the stroke option is a very good option. it's also in the "layer style" and the tab is actully called "stroke". click in this and use position "center". drag the opasity to what looks most realistic.

this is just a few tips, start with this and find what's right for you hope i could help

If you're capable of writing it by hand too, that can be very convincing. Or at least use smudge + a soft eraser to make your writing not "perfect". Especially when you have multiples of the same letter, some will notice when they're PERFECTLY identical lol. Even then, some guys are just looking to call you out. I wrote one by hand once and the dumbass still said that it looked exactly like a font he knew because he "has a degree in photoshop" ROFL.
