Nechronik - August 31, 2015, 7:22 pm

Hey HF, I recently came across an interesting pair...

These two added me on skype after I posted a $35 investment thread.

They added me and told me that they wanted to help me make a living online. Of course I thought these guys were full of shit, I just wanted to see how far they would take it.

They used sales pitches that were so cheesy and retarded, they came straight out of an 80's movie. These jackasses were so inspired by Wolf of Wallstreet, it's sad.

I won't disclose their HF usernames for I'm worried them and their band of butt-buddies will want to rep fuck me for not giving them $35.

Keep in mind they literally promised $6,000 in like two months.

They never specified what they were going to do with the money, they just said "Trust me my friend, you have no idea what I will do for you. Just trust me and I will show you the wealthy life." They were fail scammers and suck ass and doing it.

When I told him to tell me what they were doing to make the money all I got was, no no it's okay just send us the money xD

Finally, what happens when you tell a child "No" The child throws a loud and furious tantrum, of course.

I pray nobody falls for these in this day and age.

Users: Zx, V**

They'll probably post here with their same old bullshit "You will work a 9-5 job for the rest of your life and make nothing of yourself" Pathetic.

Is this against the rules?

Be careful out there HF ^-^

Retards try to ask friends on FB some info so he can "Do something" Dumbasses haha.

*update Users are Zivex and Veezon. DWC

My friend, you try to tell me that you earned $2K/month from the apparent "gaming industry". This is no way evidence of any scamming what so ever, you pretty much asked me to invest all of my time into you and help you earn money, you didn't even apply to my thread. My friend Zivex said he'd take care and asked me to try to close the sale and have you pay for him to mentor you. It was not me who I was asking you to send the payment to so you should be careful when you accuse me.

Zivex pays me to close deals for him often and that's what I tried to do. I had nothing to do with sending that PM from Zivex, in fact, I've barely spoken to him since. The part I played in this was helping out my friend, in the process, he asked me to teach him too. If this escalates, I will provide logs of the whole chat between myself, this user, and Zivex. For now, I'll leave you with my Skype chat with Zivex to prove I played no part in the "reputation PM".

I want you to notice that I did not respond to any disrespectful comments about this user.
Spoiler (Click to View)

EDIT: I'd also like to see where I promised OP $6K in 2 months. I said his goal is that amount, not that he will achieve that. In fact, my exact words were something along the lines of:

"So, what is your goal to make by the end of 2015?"

He replied.

I said:

"So I'm going to set you a new goal. Your new goal is to make $6,000 by the end of 2015."

I in NO way at all promised him anything like this, I have no idea what Zivex said to this guy but I've nothing to do with what happened in private communication between the other two users.

I don't care for his $25. The fact of the matter is, him giving $25 to Zivex is an investment of his trust. 2 digits are nothing to me, but if all somebody has is $25 and they are willing to send that, the value of that alone means more than the money and gives them the right to learn.

I didn't ask for it myself, it was on behalf of Zivex, if I was out to take this person's money, I'd have asked myself.

Somebody told him that it is easier to manipulate someone if you compliment them in some way first, such as calling them "my friend."

He thinks it is a winning sales tactic. That's why he does it.

But he overuses it so much that it just sounds fake and starts to get really annoying after a while.

He ain't my friend! :P

I barely close sales through text. If we was both using voice to voice communication, it'd be a different story, this thread wouldn't exist and he'd be satisfied. I admit that I lost my cool when I lost the sale, and he accused me of scamming, but is failing to sell something really scamming? I just told him to never contact me again if he wishes to make money. This guy says he wants to start earning, yet spends the majority of his $25 on L33T and still wants my help after he quite obviously made an investment he cannot afford and also offers no return.

Once I refused to help him and told him never to contact me again, he replied with that he's going to become a games tester and make 50x more than what "you scammers" make. He'd now accused me of scamming and also said something absolutely ridiculous and I had to put him straight... No you're 16, you're not going to make $2K/day being a "games tester" as you said you would. Pretty much, he only provided evidence here that points to me trying to steal his money, which is completely outrageous. Funny how he ignores solid advice that I gave to him without asking for any money.

I didn't try and take the $25 at all. I couldn't give a fuck about that. Where is the evidence that I attempted to take it? Say what you want about trying to "scam" him, just full of shit.

Veezon - September 2, 2015, 6:56 am

I was there for NOTHING but to sell a product. Obviously this is the first time that this user has ever experienced verbal sales before and it was new to him so immediately when somebody is asking for your money verbally and you aren't aware of really what's going on, you're going to assume it's a scam, I get that.

But for me to be given multiple negative reputations for this is quite ridiculous really, I played no part in the threatening to "rep fuck", nor planned any part in the operation to "rep fuck". That was all Zivex and nothing to me. After the user left Skype, I haven't talked to him since and I think even he can vouch for me on that one. Anyhow, once more, I just think the fact that I get given negative reputations for failing to sell a product verbally is quite ridiculous really. People need to look at this from my point of view. If a user is asking for your valuable time and efforts, would you do it for free? No, I asked him for $25 if he wishes for that.

Well, that's untrue, isn't it? The evidence is in the thread, but taking it doesn't necessarily mean scamming it.
