Archive is searching for able and willing members to help improve the forum community. From forum policy to programming, we build quality guides on the subjects we know best and are always here to offer our support. You've likely seen them around many areas of the forum. If you'd like to do the same, this is the group for you - everybody can improve.

We're ready to accept more members now after a series of trials and testing. We'll assign you a role (more on this if you're accepted) in the group. You'll also be taking part in our training programme to teach you the ins and outs of the forum. You can then use this knowledge to help other members and become a better one yourself.

Use the following format for your application:

Note that giveaway threads are not recognized as public contributions. Recruitment is ongoing and will close only when we, as a group, feel we have a stronger and healthier roster. Please don't apply if you don't have some sort of time on your hands to contribute. Best of luck!

Tommy - September 8, 2015, 3:23 am

Good luck to everyone applying. This will most likely be the last recruitment for awhile.

Brendan - September 8, 2015, 3:27 am

I'd apply, but I haven't really contributed anything to the community.

Good luck to everyone else, though.

What is an issue you see on HF and how would you fix it?

The amount of low quality posts that seem to be swarming HackForums bring unquestionable grief over the high quality members of HackForums that actually make a very good effort at making this forum, what it USED to be known for (A high quality, legit and awesome forum). I am hoping and will strive to bring this title back to HackForums, and clear out those low quality people who continue to drag this forum down and believe me, we will do it.

Tell us a bit about your forum life. Favorite section(s), aspects, hours spent per day, etc.

Well, I tend to browse the forums every day and am active on a phone/computer/tablet at least more then 5 - 6 hours a day, expect at least 10 hours on weekends. (No life yea yea)

I love to browse the fuck out of the New Posts section, waiting for that perfect thread to make my way in! xD I enjoy doing business, marketing and making money opportunities I always love to go for, innuendo section when I'm just 'feeling it' and of course, the lovely lounge where as I said above all the LQ posters live and sleep there. :)

What is an issue you see on HF and how would you fix it?

There are a lot of issues that I see on HF. Some of the mains ones are the amount of LQ members who come and post these randoms un-related threads in a totally different section and I'm always reporting them, that's if someone else already hasn't.

When some people have a question or they are looking for something.

They make a thread saying "how do I do this" "where do I find this" without even thinking about using the Search function that I very much love and use it on a daily basis.

I believe this is a big problem because, the user is wasting their own time making a thread with their question and in turn wasting other members time because they have to reference them to an already made thread about their question etc. which may take a little bit of time to find.

Another problem is a personal experience that happened yesterday. You are able to disguise IP loggers through this Someone did it to me yesterday, made a thread trying to get me dox'd by calling up my ISP and he even put my IP in the thread.

It took the staff over an hour or so to see this, so I believe another problem would be staff activity (?) and or LQ members, and the reason he did it was because he didn't like one of my tutorials.

Tell us a bit about your forum life. Favorite section(s), aspects, hours spent per day, etc.

These are my profile stats.

I joined July 7th 2015, I loved the forum from the second I joined, I loved how most people were very nice and friendly to a newbie like me at the time.

As you can see I have over 1.2k posts in that period of time, mounting up to a whopping 20.12 ppd on my profile stats.

I have nearly over 2 weeks spent on HackForums (not literally, but stats wise) and I'm a very active member and I love coming on here everyday.

I have over 143 reputation, 2 negatives and the rest are positive.

I have reported over 22 posts (which isn't much) but it can only grow as the amount of LQ people post.

Some of my favorite sections so far since I've joined are.

Anime Adventures

Lounge

Server Stress Testing

Premium Sellers Section

And mostly every section in the Hack Tab

I'm currently still in school, love subjects such as Technical Graphics, German, IT & English.

I love the aspects of HF such as HFES which I find very useful to be honest. I'm currently using a theme that another user made, it's a black kind of theme and it makes HF look really nice.

What is an issue you see on HF and how would you fix it?

Lack of knowledge. Why? Let me explain.

When I look at the 'view new threads' page, all I see are tutorials / scam reports / trolling / and people asking for help

1 out of 4 of those things are actually beneficial and honestly, even that is near useless. Tutorials are great because they tell / show you how to get something done but they are coming from people who are not teachers. They lack the ability to teach, they can only show how something is done and it bothers me a bit. This is what I want to fix.

Tell us a bit about your forum life. Favorite section(s), aspects, hours spent per day, etc.

I used to come to HF religiously but now I work 2 jobs and have little time. As the winter nears I will have more and more time to dedicate to the forum again and you can expect to see me around more.

My favorite section is probably the tutorial / money section. I like looking at how other people make money & scroll through the tutorial section to see how other people look at different things. There are over 20 tuts on similar topics but all done in different ways and that fascinates me to see how people think.

Odin I know we have not gotten along in the past but meh, I'm genuinely interested in joining & hope you can look past it.

If you would like to know anything else just shoot me a quick pm.

What is an issue you see on HF and how would you fix it?

I think one of the biggest issues is that members make threads without actually searching for things. Now, I get that searching takes a while and most members aren't upgraded and thus they have a longer search flood limit. However, I think that by making compilations, a list of commonly asked questions, and centralizing that list we can reduce the amount of these threads. Having such a list in the programming sections, for example, can increase the life of small tutorials/threads that are made and get lost in the pagination.

Another issue that I've recently started seeing is that there isn't much discussion going on. I see people asking for help regarding certain aspects and tutorials made regarding certain aspects, but no one actually goes above and beyond and tries to make a discussion. People reply to tutorials with "thanks" or "this is great" but they don't show how the tutorial benefitted them or ways to do things differently.

Also see this post.

Tell us a bit about your forum life. Favorite section(s), aspects, hours spent per day, etc.

My favorite sections are the coding sections, I try to visit them as much as possible and help members that seek it. I also like to visit certain Marketplace sections such as the Marketplace discussions, buyer's bay and the hiring section just to see what's in the market. I also frequent the Hackforums Official forum and try to help members asking policy questions and such. Some other sections that I frequent include Education Nation, my group membership subforums (the lounge posts are actually The Empire posts from back when "that" happened, I rarely post in the lounge), and the Website Construction forums.

I generally spend around 3-5 hours a day on the forums. Sometimes, I spend more, it all depends.

What is an issue you see on HF and how would you fix it?

We all know HF has its flaws, from trolls, to LQ members, scammers, and the list goes on. In my opinion the HF community is very diverse, full of unique personalities all of which consist of different purposes for being here. Many people are here on HF to have fun, help others out, and generally share their knowledge on different subjects.

Unfortunately these flaws are still present here on HF. One issue that really stands out to me personally is the quality of posting. Yeah sure, LQ posters have been around since day 1 and many people have attempted to take a stand against it, whether it be an official HF group, or just a small bundle of members. Just the amount of useless threads or posts created give no benefit whatsoever to the OP or anyone reading it really amazes me, and it seems it's not dying down as much as some of us had anticipated. I knew since the day I joined I'd like to set an example to others and be as high quality as possible. Helping others and sharing my knowledge on various topics is what I enjoy doing. I look at Archive as one of the most high-quality and most contributing groups towards HF and I believe that it's the group I'd best fit in due to my interests in making HF a better place to be.

Tell us a bit about your forum life. Favorite section(s), aspects, hours spent per day, etc.

Originally I joined HF with an interest in Hacking like many of us did, little did I know I'm now posting in sections that aren't even close to being related to hacking. Nowadays, I spend most of my time, around the Game and Tech tabs. Something I really enjoy is helping out others in the Windows 10 and COCH sections. Whether it'd be with their brand new computer build, or someone is having trouble with Windows 10, I enjoy lending a helping hand. I find the discussions there are very intriguing to me, every time I enter that section I learn something new and that's what I like most about it. As I mentioned, I also spend a lot of time in the Game tab, most notably, the Counter-Strike section. There's not a solid reason why I spend most of my time there, only thing I can really say is I just like the game. While the section itself could use a bit of tidying up, I think all-in-all I enjoy discussing topics with other users. Every so often I'll take a gander at the Marketplace and see if I find anyone's products or services are appealing to me.

Typically I'll end up spending most of my after-school time browsing HF and seeing what everyone is up to. It's a somewhat wide time frame, but I'll spend anywhere from 4 - 6 hours here.

What is an issue you see on HF and how would you fix it?

The coding sections are flooded with low quality help threads and the high quality tutorials are quickly lost. I am working on posting more tutorials in those sections, but I think King of Hearts has already done a great job with the sticky thread in the Java section to help organize all the tutorials there. Obviously, the hacking tutorials sections have a big problem too - and I still plan on helping there too.

One other thing, it's not so much an issue as an improvement: I would like to see more integration of Omnicoin with the forum, and I am actually actively working on things at the moment to improve it.

Tell us a bit about your forum life. Favorite section(s), aspects, hours spent per day, etc.

I generally have a quick check over my favourite sections before I go to school in the morning, and then spend a few hours online (not just HF though) after school. I do have a busy schedule, I am sitting full time university at the same time as my final year of school + scholarship subjects, so my free time varies from day to day. In general, though, I will be able to find time to participate actively in the group and its activities, and will let you know if there are periods of time I may have to be inactive for. My favourite sections are the Omnicoin subforum, Divine group subforum, coding subforums, and the RANF section, and I generally check all of them each time I am online. I will also occasionally check the contests forum to see if there are any interesting ones running.

Thank you for reading and considering my application ?

What is an issue you see on HF and how would you fix it?

The coding sections are flooded with low quality help threads and the high quality tutorials are quickly lost. I am working on posting more tutorials in those sections, but I think King of Hearts has already done a great job with the sticky thread in the Java section to help organize all the tutorials there. Obviously, the hacking tutorials sections have a big problem too - and I still plan on helping there too.

One other thing, it's not so much an issue as an improvement: I would like to see more integration of Omnicoin with the forum, and I am actually actively working on things at the moment to improve it.

Tell us a bit about your forum life. Favorite section(s), aspects, hours spent per day, etc.

I generally have a quick check over my favourite sections before I go to school in the morning, and then spend a few hours online (not just HF though) after school. I do have a busy schedule, I am sitting full time university at the same time as my final year of school + scholarship subjects, so my free time varies from day to day. In general, though, I will be able to find time to participate actively in the group and its activities, and will let you know if there are periods of time I may have to be inactive for. My favourite sections are the Omnicoin subforum, Divine group subforum, coding subforums, and the RANF section, and I generally check all of them each time I am online. I will also occasionally check the contests forum to see if there are any interesting ones running.

Thank you for reading and considering my application ?

What is an issue you see on HF and how would you fix it?

Biggest issue is tutorials in each section. There aren't enough threads that give detailed tutorials on skills, even in the gaming section (which is surprising). You would think on any forum that each section would have some sort of introduction to maybe lure new players that may have learned of the game through the forum? I've learned of many things solely because I came across it on this forum, and I hope to have that impact.

Scam reports are another big issue on HackForums. I think it would be in everyones best interest to have some sort of official middle man system for trades. Somehow. I think I have an idea as well.

Tell us a bit about your forum life. Favorite section(s), aspects, hours spent per day, etc.
I usually lurk or come on here to sell my stuff (online handles; look at my threads). I spend around 3-4 hours a day I would say, probably more but intermittently. I usually look in the vices section and marketplace, only sections pertinent to me right now.

I'm 17 year old from Norway, and HF is a part of my life. This is a forum that I'm joining every day, to check out what everyone says, and this great and lovely community. My favorite section is probably The Lounge, Market place, and sometimes the E-whoring section. I've got 1,077 Posts, and 1.73 Post's per day.

The reason that I've got such a low ppd, is that I was inactive the first 2 years I made my account.

What is an issue you see on HF and how would you fix it?

I honestly think a lot of aspects about Hackforums aren't that good. For example MOTM. It's more of a popularity contest than anything. I also think that getting accepted for Ub3r should be harder. I've seen way too many ub3rs with 100-200 posts. I feel like some warnings should be void when trying to apply. What I mean by that is, if you get a warning for a certain reason it shouldn't restrict your ability to apply. I also think that the coding sections are a little under rated. There should be a lot more activity there. I myself love Java and I would like to see the section more active, all of the sections for that matter.

Tell us a bit about your forum life. Favorite section(s), aspects, hours spent per day, etc.

I spend a lot of time on this forum because I like it. My favorite section is probably the lounge. I love seeing all the troll threads, I also love doing a little trolling from time to time myself. My favorite aspect about the forum is probably the different usergroups. I know lots of forums have them but I like that there's so many that you could join. I also really like how the marketplace operates. I like how the staff seldom get involved in deal disputes and I also like how Omni implemented BTC purchase for Epic and the omc award. Overall I do like this forum a lot. I only joined a few months ago but I feel that I've come pretty far since then. Peace.

What is an issue you see on HF and how would you fix it?

1. Section moderation, for example, look at the eWhoring section, it is a rampage with people from trolling too asking the same questions and breaking the rules talking about carding etc...

We could fix this by two ways

First one is too get more section moderators.

Second option is too make a rank for a specific section, lets call it Section Runner.

The Section Runner can,Delete posts

Delete threads

People can become a section runner by being active and helping the section, if they do something wrong they will receive a warning, and if they receive a second one they will be removed as section runner.

If they delete valuable tutorials, that is no problem, because a section runner can only prune posts too the [sub forum] Section runner bin, so if they go all rampage staff/admins can recover a post or a thread.

I spend around 1 too 3 hours a day on Hackforums, i love talking about things and discussion my interests.

My forum life

I have always been reading forums and chans, it is awesome you can share your opinion, you can learn and teach, it is awesome.

First i was always active on XDA forums and reddit. i love reddit, it has so many things to discuss and too learn. my favorite sections were /r/dailycode /r/python /r/html.

On Hackforums, it is awesome, i have been around here now for a long time, around 6 months, and i feel that the community is so awesome, so many awesome people. I have never loved a forum this much, that is why i spend time on Hackforums. Found my interests and shared opinions.

My favorite sections are

The lounge ~ Because of the interesting and funny threads, i love it.

All coding sub forums ~ My post count isn't high there but i love too lurk and learn a lot, i have been coding in Python/xhtml css and right now i am going to learn visual basics and c#.

Market place discussion ~ always interesting reading what has been up in the market place.

GFX ~ i love learning about designing.

News and happenings ~ always interesting too post a thread for some opinions, and i love reading there.

I've been on HackForums since 2011 and I've seen it going through a lot of stages. We've had great members come and go, we had those group times and what not. But I believe, HF is changing. And it isn't what it used to be. It's mostly about the marketplace now. Sure, there are good members out there and will continue to be but there is a drastic decrease in quality and contributions made by the members. I feel we need to revive that quality posting back and I'm willing to actually put in my time to make this happen. And if being a apart of this group and with a leader who also aspires to make this happen, this will make it only easier. I shall totally be willing to take part in whatever you do.

This service was very successful. Not only did I have a large amount of sales, but I helped a user find more about his mother who passed away when he was young, and assisted him in finding closure. I am considering reopening this service with insanely low prices soon.

Three or four different script giveaways

This is one of many threads that involved me giving out some nice scripts. Nothing I had was another user's work that was given out without their permission. I had full use of all of them.

I'll randomly do free favors for members who have good intentions

PedoBombing service

This was more of a "comedic" service. It was very cheap and simple! It was more of a friendly prank on friends. It was not the "addmecontacts" method either. I had my secret ways of doing this :)

I allow every member support

This service had a closed thread so that it wouldn't get any flame in the replies, but the amount of PMs I received was astonishing. I stayed up about 3-4 hours past when I previously planned so that I could give some relationship advice, talk about religion with confused people, and even simple things as helping people make decisions with problems in their lives.

What is an issue you see on HF and how would you fix it?

While HF is a great community to be a part of, everything has flaws. One in particular I see, is the amount of flammers and people being misinformed in numerous sections. In the beginner's hacking section, there's countless people being given the wrong idea. Even if they're not given bad advice, lots of people are on the wrong path. I don't claim to be a pro hacker, or anything close, but I know the basics and I am able to set people on the correct path to ensure that they can be successful with some hard work and good work ethics.

This isn't so much a PROBLEM, but more an area that can be improved with some knowledge. The "Science, Religion, and Philosophy" section is a great place to debate and chat, but it has its flaws. Lots of flame is apparent to me there, and numerous people are getting the wrong idea about different scenarios. I would love to open people's eyes up to new worlds and information.

Finally, there's the "Requests For Hacking" section. This area of the forum seems to get neglected most often. Lots of people just downplay the user's request and usually fail to even attempt to help. Most days, I don't see one request get answered or filled. I'm not saying I'm going to be doing every request there, but I can fill some requests that have good intentions. For example, I would not work with somebody who said "Please hack my school" or "How can I spy on my girlfriend." Things that I do enjoy helping out with are the following.

- A real problem that can be solved
- Cyber bullying cases that need to be handled
- Something moral or correct

An example of this:

I recently had some free time, so I opened up tor and just looked on the deep web out of curiosity. I DO NOT partake in anything on there, it's just always an adventure to browse. I came across some child porn sites and I was disgusted. One of my recent goals is to take a few of them down. I have started to put this into action with a few other members, but recently I've been tight with time. That has not affected my ability to be active however. Some of the members I am working with include True Demon and Armada.

Tell us a bit about your forum life. Favorite section(s), aspects, hours spent per day, etc.

School started recently, and that downed my hours slightly, but I'm always on when I'm able to. I spend about 4-5 hours /day browsing the forums give or take a couple. Some of my time is in the beginner's hacking section, and others are the in Science, Religion, and Philosophy, and the rest is in the lounge. In the beginner's hacking section, I usually PM members who have problems and I'll solve them via teamviewer, or give them some simple advice. In the SR&P section I am always up for a good debate and learning other's opinions in order to make mine stronger and become more educated. Finally, in the lounge I am usually talking about my day, and allowing any users to PM me and vent about anything they would like. All in all, I was intrigued to apply to this group after chatting with Intelligent Sin. This user has opened my eyes to many different ideas, and he is intelligent, just as his name says. I was just PMing him a few days ago asking when you guys would recruit again.

To sum up why I want to join:

I have seen very HQ posts from members of the group, and it would be an honor to be a part of this. I'm really striving to find a group of intelligent members to chat with, and help educate and strengthen the community as a whole. This looks like a noble batch of users that know their stuff. Hope I can get in this recruitment phase, as it will be the last one in the while.

Best of luck to all the other applicants, and I'm looking forward to your feedback.

What is an issue you see on HF and how would you fix it?

The wide variety in forums for small groups. For example the people who do graphics here have so many sub forums to post in and its all spread out too much, whereas communities that are quite large only have one subforum like eWhoring, that could do with another forum like picture packs or a subforum in the marketplace.

Honestly? I enjoy the lounge, group subforums and the eWhoring section. I post a lot in the lounge creating topics but also joining debates.

I enjoy the SRPP subforum but I don't use it as much as I could. If I had to pick one, it'd definitely be the lounge! Thanks

The constant *ing to old threads in the Perl programming section (Mainly ones asking the OP to PM them a DDOS script or something of the like.)/(Or any other section for this matter. It seems old threads always get posted on long after the OP is banned or goes inactive. Most of the time its leechers who don't add to the discussion, and often times are asking the OP to send them a PM)

I don't really have any power to implement this, but, I'd like the see threads locked X amount of days after the OP is banned/or inactive.

I'm mainly a lurker.

Generally I lurk around the .NET and Perl sections. I often venture over into the marketplace and Tech (Mainly the Linux and Windows Sub-Sections) sections though.

I spend about 10+ hours on HF everyday...I may not post but, I'm around.

For lots of people scamming is an issue in these forums. Hackforums wallets is a possible solution to this. For instance when 2 people want to do an exchange of btc and omc, they can load their hf wallets and then one of them sends to the other a formal currency exchange request (like paypal's payment request) and when the other person clicks on "accept" the transaction happens automatically. But if one has insufficient funds the system will disallow their transaction. The whole idea is to stop relying on the other person's good character and rely on a system that does not allow scams.

I spend probably 8 hours a day on the forum. I like the begginer hacking section and lately I started studying the advanced hacking section. I enjoy helping newer members and have helped lots of them through Hackforums and Skype. I plan on expanding my existing tutorial, because I like my threads as tidy as possible. In time I am sure I will write tutorials on other aspects of hacking too.

I would like to be a part of the Archive because it is a really high quality group and being in it would motivate me to be even more HQ.

Thanks (:
