I don't vouch unless I can actually test, in this case I was given the opportunity.

I threw this at the following:Luminosity Link

Imminent Monitor 3

Nanocore

Ozone

Babylon

njRAT

My findings are as follows:

The crypter is in "Basic" stages, not a TON of features implemented, as of yet. I have spoken with the developer on this matter and supplied my input. IMO Further development is needed. However I find it VERY important to note, my recommendation for this was not to supplement the crypters functionality or subdue its effectiveness by "more features"

More so to remain more competitive in the ever evolving cryptographic market. ?

As for the encryption itself, among all I found a common variable of 1-2 detection's, both either from NOD or EST. Neither detection's are good, I tried numerous builds, avoiding the commonalities such as icon detection's and assembly error, to no avail. However, the overall detection rate was brought down SUBSTANTIALLY in some cases well over 90%.

I highly suspect the existing detection ratio I managed was simply due to the testing phase and having tested this on its primary build stub.

I highly recommend this crypter to those who utilize the .net architecture. ?

Cyber Protector is still 40% off, new thread design coming soon!

Incendiary. - September 15, 2015, 4:25 pm

I received a vouch copy of this crypter. Below is my review of it.

The GUI/Interface.

Cyber Protector is a very simplistic crypter, and this is not a bad thing. The text of the stub directory/location is next to impossible to see, however i am sure this will be a very easy thing to fix.

Features.

Cyber Protector is lacking in some features that other crypters might have. It has the Persistence, Delay, Melt, AntiVM, Startup and .NET 2.0 support. For your average user those are all the feature you will need. From my testing each feature worked well. The delay was accurate, Persistence worked when trying to remove the process from Task Manager. Startup worked, and AntiVM worked without a hitch. The only issue i ran into was the 'Melt' feature. It just left my computer with a 'Loading' cursor. However when trying to delete the file manually it does not affect the connection with the server. I have spoken to the dev about this and he has assured me it will be fixed in the near future!

I personally tested Cyber Protector with Babylon RAT (<https://hackforums.net/showthread.php?tid=4930801>) and LuminosityLink. (<https://hackforums.net/showthread.php?tid=4778957>). It worked flawlessly with both RATs, and i did not loose a single client when testing.

FUDness.

Using the crypters startup i was getting 2/35 on reFUD.me. Using the RATs startup it was fully FUD!

Other Notes.

I ran into a few issues when testing. The crypter would sometimes partially hang, and i would not be able to edit certain options (AntiVM on/off for example.) I would also like to see a bit more organization in the UI. For example there is nothing hinting that for 'Melt' to be togglable you need Startup enabled. This is a very small thing that all users will get used too after a use or two. Also the ability to choose a output path of the finished stub, as well as change its name/icon/assembly information is a important inclusion that i am certain will be in future updates. Finally when you build a stub the crypter automatically closes. I found this a tad annoying, but i am sure some people will like this.

This is a very simplistic crypter that i would happily recommend to anyone that's looking for one. This has my vouch ? ?

Please go sales trash elsewhere.

Not trashing your sales at all. Simply pointing out that you tried to fool people into thinking you and your friend were developing a rat, then I exposed you for trying to pass off a public source as your rat in development, then you edited your thread to mention it was in-deed public, after being exposed.

As well as pointing out that you couldn't develop anything if you tried.

I will stop pointing out things on this thread now. Good luck with sales :)
