Thread: Looking for someone who knows how to retrieve hidden info from a browser game

kalamees123 - September 24, 2015, 5:44 am

Hey, I would hugely appreciate it if somebody could help me get some very specific information from a browser based football manager game at trophymanager.com.

Will discuss details either by email (carlosmmpm123@hotmail.com) or private message here.

Will be looking forward to hearing from you,

Carlos

So you really mean the database. Right?

Hey man, thank you so much for the quick reply.

Well, I do apologise, I really know next to nothing about IT but long story short - the players in that game all have a potential rating on a scale of 1-20. 1 meaning the player will become completely useless and 20 meaning he will develop into a world class player. That rating is hidden though and is revealed only by scouting a specific player (but scouting is limited). Thus, I am writing to ask if you think it would possible at all to somehow get that 1 number displayed for every player without actually scouting him?

To answer your question - I guess it must be about the database, right? :)

Will be forever grateful for any possible assistance!

Could anyone please tell me if something like this is even possible?

Would be hugely appreciated!

Also, let's say somebody is willing to help me and I would like to pay them for the trouble. Could you please show me the part of the forum I should leave my corresponding message in? I read that stuff like this belongs to the "Market" but I didn't find an appropriate place for this in there either. This forum is just huge :)

Why not suck some dick? No one is going to help you make $50 million dollars and you just sit on your ass while someone works for months for free just so you can make $50 million dollars. No one works for free shithead. ?
