brian188246 - September 30, 2015, 5:57 pm

He already has like 10 scam reports on him, in the future look up the person's UID.

Sorry you got scammed, don't expect to see the money though.

KneeGrowsMobbin - September 30, 2015, 5:57 pm

how do i look up his uid man. thanks for the advice homie

how do i look up his uid. and thanks man for the help

i just pointed him to this thread on skype

0x - September 30, 2015, 7:19 pm

So last night I was speaking to this guy to sell him an eBay giftcard of $500 for $300 and he accepted so I sent him my address and he replied stating he doesn't have access to his wallet right now so we'll do this tomorrow in the morning. I wouldn't expect him to contact me before sending any payment out due to the fact multiple wallets dispensed addresses after a certain amount of time and we don't have access to these private keys so the guy sent the money to the address from last night that was dispensed and is no longer in my possessions. The BTC was lost and that's why this is a tough situation.

He said he would personally get me a gift card for the misunderstanding if you read the Skype log. We agreed that if I didn't get a card by 10 which was a reasonable amount of time to get a card he would accept it as a scam. Now he wants to make excuses. Jesus no faith in humanity

And the funny part is his excuse the wallet changes but I'm pretty sure it changes every 72 hours. But good tho my man Seems like a legit scam report. Good luck.

Go back to univision kid.

PS: he sent $300 worth of BTC to the address not 300 BTC.

Anyway, I don't care of what opinions you guys have, you have no meaning for me so continue and waste your time typing 'oh ye right u scammer'

Meh, my side of the story has been shared and I have nothing else to say.

You can't request a refund if the vendor doesn't allow refunds. You were sent your accounts so stop with the stupidity.

If you have an issue, open a scam report and let me post the proof you're items was sent.
