There is not much I can do unfortunately. It is just google being difficult and stubborn...

Quote:Chrome helps counter this behavior by checking executable downloads against a list of known good files and publishers. If a file isn't from a known source, Chrome sends the URL and IP of the host and other meta data, such as the file's hash and binary size, to Google. The file is automatically classified using machine learning analysis and the reputation and trustworthiness of files previously seen from the same publisher and website. Google then sends the results back to Chrome, which warns you if you're at risk.

I think it is because DirectEXE is a most trusted and established host. My site is relatively new and google doesn't trust it. Hopefully it will get better, but I can' guarantee anything. Sorry.

LSDoom - October 16, 2015, 11:39 am

I am amazed on how many people are actually using the site. I will definitely keep the site running for as long as there are people using it :)

This is just after a few days of being online.

Feel free to post more suggestions or tips on how I can make the site even more effective and user friendly.

HearthStoneCards - October 26, 2015, 12:05 pm

Honestly I would just prefer a plain text website with no images etc.

Just a place that gets the job done and no ads etc.

Thanks. I appreciate the kind words :)

Unfortunately it appears that people have reported the site as a host of malicious content, so the site is being blacklisted by some AVs. I am working on this issue as we speak.

The site could be a little simpler, but I don't really think it will get any cleaner then it already is. There are also no ads or popups on the site.

Thanks for you suggestions.

DamienVC - October 31, 2015, 1:55 am

Really good alternative for a filehost.
Thanks for the share

LSDoom - November 7, 2015, 9:46 am

I am upgrading the hosting script, so the site might be loading slowly or become offline for a little while. This shouldn't take very long.

Thanks,
LSDoom

EDIT:

The upgrade to 4.2 has been successful and site should be back up and running perfectly. Sorry if this caused any problems for you guys.

I can verify that there is a problem with our email service. I am working on a fix right now, meanwhile I sent a PM with all the required login information.

Sorry for any inconvenience this may have caused.

EDIT:

For anything trying to register and not receiving the email containing their password, please PM me here and I can send you a password for your account on Nevergreen.net. We are currently having a problem with our mailserver.

The domain has been blacklisted, so no matter what you upload/down from chrome is going to get flagged as malware. There is not much I can do about it unfortunately, sorry mate.

Yup, my account was just suspended. I'll have to look into some longer lasting solutions. The main problem is that the domain gets blacklisted after a while, not quite sure how to prevent that from happening.

Try NameCheap, they've always been more understanding of this sorta stuff.

Also encrypt the files that are uploaded, that way they won't give off detections while stored.
