WELCOME TO THE DIVINE CHALLENGE

This is Divine's first official community event. It is made up of a series of challenges ranging from easy to difficult (although not always in that order).

There will be prizes on offer for the members who complete the challenge.

Challenges will involve many areas, ranging from stenography and mathematics to puzzle solving and reading music. Coding ability is not required for the most part, but it will be necessary to do some of the mathematics with a computer, so basic knowledge of coding is advised.

The Divine Challenge is only possible on a computer, not mobile devices, but you may access the stats page to check rankings on any device.

Hints will be added to particular challenges if we feel that they are too difficult. Do not PM me for a hint.

THE CHALLENGE BEGINS IN:

Requesting the full site shows a timer, not sure if changing the user agent would work (too?)

And I bet we can do some basic challenges on mobile.
I can view source and do some things on phone too.

Nope, we decided it would be easiest to only allow the challenge on PC because even if you manage a couple of them, you will have to do most on PC

The first challenge is bypassing the mobile restriction to do the challenge on your phone xD

No offence, but you cant have a competition before all the prices are decided.. that's just weird .. all you said (or what i interpret it like) is that we don't know at the moment but will probably include awards, upgrades, group spots and licenses to products. We have some prizes decided but not all, so will announce later. It's just a fun event not a competition, so technically we aren't even obliged to offer prizes. You will just have to wait and see ?

Btw, remember that Titans also don't announce prizes before their events.

So I'm able to assume at least a few days, maybe a week? I'm very interested in doing the challenges, but I don't necessarily want my whole weekend, or week, revolving around it. Do you have at least a rough estimate? More than a few days? Of course I don't know how many challenges or anything, I'm not quite sure what to really expect.

Yeah I know I'm in divine and it seems weird to say that it's easy, but I did not know the answer to the first question, and figured that out by myself. It is do-able.

I've been ages loading one page.

I type the answer, go on IRC, make my snus, put it up there and then it is complete. Literally, that just happened. Took about 40-50 seconds to load. Every single time now.

HF is fast as well as other sites so I assume it is on their end, not mine.

Steganography isn't just like the steganography in crypters. most steganography hides in plain site in a few rows of pixels, containing bytes for another image or just some text. Either way the image itself hasn't really been tampered to much as when you do a reverse image search on it, it's been used in plenty of websites.

So it's most likely a small message stored using steganography.

Sho?kwave - October 16, 2015, 7:14 pm

Starting to think it isn't steganography, and that they just appended another images bytes to this image and removed the file header to make it harder as the file size is suspiciously large.

I've tried most steg methods to extract data, nothing seems to work.

Probably going to head to bed now, been up way to long trying to figure this out, good luck everyone.

Would it be possible to make it nonlinear? Perhaps like a jeopardy style game where you can select the challenges based on a point value: less value for easier ones. That way if you can't do one problem, you can still continue doing challenges.

Just a thought. I'm still stuck on 3, but I'd love to take a whack at 4, since I've done stego before.

idc about the prize im just doing this for fun

Okay clarification:

There will be spot checks on prize winners so if you work together you must both understand the full process to arrive at the solution. That is fine. I just don't want one person giving all the answers to his friends.

I have a whole One Note directory filled with write-ups from all sorts of challenges and CTF's that I do. Usually I can still see the challenges after it's completed, since once I get in a groove I just keep going. I usually go back after to keep notes for future challenges if anything uses something I've already learned.

Divine has a lot of good coders in it. The products you might be referring to were not coded by divine members - they were purchased by nex, who was unaware of their low quality. Debug is not divine. A lot of big changes happened when the group ownership changed, and we are working hard to contribute to the community in a HQ way.

Divine is just a rebranded Debug.

I've had a few of your members, including Nex, personally ask me to add new themes to their applications. It was obvious that they were using old, outdated software and wanted to hide that by updating the UI.

Nex has admitted he cannot code, and is here to make money. How does that relate to the group? He owns the group, yes. He provides a place for the group to exist, because none of us could have afforded it. But the group is made of members - not just it's owner.

Will the key be something that we will see and immediately know "that's the key", or is it 10 random chars? And are they all ASCII chars, or could it be anything from \x00-\xFF?

Edit: I guess that doesn't make sense since the answer is the key xD

They are all ASCII characters, all uppercase letters. It is random though. But you can try as many times as you like on the panel :)

Encoding. Sorry.

Clearly this is a custom encoding method, it's not coincidence that it is made of only lols. Break it down. Look at length, letters, repetitiveness/patterns, etc.

I can't just tell you the algorithm, that would make it too easy. This is a cracking challenge

It's built against a java version your version doesn't support. Normally occurs if you run any version of java below the JDK used to compile it, if that makes sense.

Ad it's actually quite simple, it is quite possible for you to solve it if you start to find the relationship between the text and the encoded text

Ehh,

Encoding does not require a key.. It never has. Never will.

Encoding is used to transfer data between something safely and can be transferred back safely as long as the receiving device has the algorithm. (A = YXB B=BXY C=etc...)

Which with this one, if we manage to translate each character in the string to match the original one using something like, Frequency analyzing and basic logic then you should see that we would only get back the decoded word. Not any key.

For example:

In base64 when you start off with "ab" and encode it you get YW at the beginning. As longer as you go the longer the encoded data will become. However, the first 2 in decoded message (ab) and in the encoded one (YW) are still the same.

Basically, if we analyze it and figure each character out in the alphabet we have broken the encoding algorithm and can create it because we know how it works and what characters translate to what.

Now, to make this challenge harder, there is also the possibility that one letter becomes "ABBA" but when you combine two you won't get "ABBAABBA" but instead something like "SURGUR". lame example but this is also a possibility to think about.

Encrypting can require a key.

That is used to keep something a secret. Typically this uses a key to keep the encrypted text or data a secret unless the receiver has the key.

So.. This is an encryption challenge, not encoding.

I assume you have literally fucked this challenge seriously up with your usage of the words encoding and encrypting.

you're gonna have to give us more than one example if you want us to find patterns mate. I see the beginning 4 chars on each line of 8 chars and the strlen in total and have a few theories but nothing solid if I can't compare and refer to any similarities or anomalies.

or maybe im just a shitter also im pretty sure this would be classified as an encryption challenge...

Nutar - October 19, 2015, 11:38 am

I'm guessing that part of the challenge is figuring out the cipher used. From that, we'll have to find the key. Am I right Mesh?

Yeah because you know how you made it. Try to solve that shit when you have no idea.

And the encoding/encryption thing is also a problem. I know that it's most likely a cipher(wont tell which one) but that shit doesn't make any sense.

Dvorak - October 20, 2015, 12:14 pm

I'm going to ask this again. For #11 you state that you solved it before you put it in as a challenge.

What knowledge did you have while you solved it? Did you know the custom cipher? Did you have multiple samples?

What I don't think you realize is that by using a custom non-disclosed cipher, secret key, and only putting in a single sample it's near impossible for us to figure out the answer.

If we had more than one sample this would be much better. Or give us the cipher that you used. We could literally invent any cipher we wanted for this challenge but it's likely to not be the same as yours, and thus we will never reach a conclusive answer.

All of this is also further blurred by the fact that you state this is an encoding challenge, yet you're asking for a key which indicates a crypto challenge. Crypto is not encoding.

samsepi01 - October 20, 2015, 12:41 pm

Yeah, the terminology used has really confused all of us. And Dvorak is completely right, using a custom cipher with a secret key and only having one sample is almost impossible. I could invent my own cipher that provides that output with the input using my own key, but it certainly wouldn't correspond with yours.

There just simply isn't enough context, or instruction. Are we supposed to bruteforce (or dictionary) attack it? Are we supposed to mathematically reverse it? It is too vague for a challenge like this during a competition.

420 Blaze It - October 20, 2015, 12:53 pm

I'm quite sure that each challenges will take 10 minutes to complete if the method is known.

Mesh, can we have a second string that's been encoded. We don't need the decoded answer, we just want a second string with this 'custom encryption' method.

Even if he fixes the wording in the instructions, the fact that it's called "encoding" yet requires a "key" is blowing my mind.

Challenge 11 uses a simple encryption which is reversible using the same key.

Someone has solved it already, but I may post more hints if everyone else continues to struggle.

Your usage of words affects the challenge quite much. We spent quite some time talking about if it is encryption or encoding challenge and if it was encoding challenge why there would be a key. The words you choose in a question really matter.

I've tried string, stream, pdf editor ,photo layer, forensic analysis, exif and others. Haven't been able to remove the blanks

Well.. you know where I am.. But meh, I guess neither of us care about the money because I couldn't use it for Alcohol. I couldn't even get my hands on that money most likely if they only transfer it through PayPal or something like that. I wouldn't mind if I could get it on my bank account.. But meh.

I only have tonight really to work on this. I have a fucking web site to finish for my school and 600 pictures to match students to.. My life is literally full..

My Week just went to the dog. another 70hr work week..

#13's gonna have to wait for me too..

Viral: I honestly thought you were gonna be first to finish this challenge.

I've ignore every challenge because i want to finish inorder_. Chronological order. The fake 13 is a waste of time and ridiculous. I'd rather finish the _real #13. .____.

I'm done with all except #13

However, I'm wondering, why I don't get the "Incorrect" when trying to input some bullshit as the solution ?

Kinda important to know if you are wrong or right isn't it ?

I'll finish the others some time tonight or tomorrow maybe, but tbh, if everyone was able to beat it so fast, prob not worth my time. Lol.

18 is a problem..

How the fuck is one supposed to know how to connect to windows ?

hard as people think.

I'm already done... Had to try 4 different clients.... The last one worked fine.

I hate VNC&RDP...

Looks like everyone is pretty much done with this. I will close the thread on November 1. The challenge will remain live on the website for an undetermined length of time afterwards.

I hope someone manages to finish #13 before then, but otherwise they can still continue to work on it after the thread closes and PM me to open this back up if they do it.

Aww your going to close it? Damn. I'm only on 8.

As I close this, I would just like to thank everyone who participated in our event. This is the first time we have organised such an event - and hence it isn't suprising there were a few bumps along the way - but overall I think it went well and I hope you enjoyed it. Keep watch for future events.

Thanks, Mesh ?
