(Nov 30, 2015 09:13 AM)Asentrix Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#)

<https://hackforums.review/metropop-478.html>

Metropop is an interesting script , it takes advantage of common knowledge and preys on victims who use windows 8+.

Although when you purchase the script , you aren't instructed to use it maliciously , I assume that's it's main selling point.

Metropop alerts visitors viewing your website with a familiar popup that they may or may not have seen before.

Looking almost identical too the popups / smartscreen you see in windows 8+ , most users would assume it's legitimate.

Unless your file looks illegitimate , the majority of viewers wouldn't think twice / question it's integrity.

Although it does work to some extent , I can't help but feel like it isn't getting the job done.

The execution rates aren't quite what I expected , infact I haven't received a single install.

Now that could be bad marketing by me or possibly a lack of traffic / interest , but one things for sure , it's dissapointing.

Perhaps if you set up a nice niche , get some good backlinks and SEO , you would get a lot more downloads / installs.

I can't really complain too much though considering the price is cheaper than a burger!

One thing I am happy about is how lightweight the script is and the quality of Metropop.

It isn't exactly complicated putting it on your website , but configuring it to work with big websites takes a while.

Support wasn't exactly fantastic , but 'tl;dr' did attempt to help me out , so the thought was there at least.

When contacting the original author , I was advised that I wouldn't receive any help installing the script.

I was then deleted from skype & blocked by the original coder which was quite strange.

Having no clue how to configure it , I managed too finally get it up and running after messing with some settings.

It's practically the closest thing we have currently to a JDB (with the exception of EK's).

I'm not dissapointed with the product , I'm only disappointed by the results.

Hopefully in the future I can set up something better and update this review.

Do I think it's worth the buy? Yes

It's cheap , looks good , it's lightweight and honestly , configuring / installing the script isn't too difficult.

Give it a shot , you may have better results than I did!

Developer here.

Your best bet at not getting your download blocked is to have your website verified in the Google Webmaster Tools panel: <https://www.google.com/webmasters/verification/home?hl=en>

I would suggest not including the popup until after your website is verified. Once verified you should be able to bypass the block, but it is no guarantee. Google gives your website a "trust" score on the back end, and their trust in your website is what determines the block or not. If your website has some age, good content, is verified, and preferably uses SSL, you should have nothing to worry about.

If you are building a churn and burn site, this will be more difficult, though not impossible.

I recieved a vouch copy of this ebook and here is my review :

[Setup]

The setup was really easy todo and just had one error (a path was wrong and tl;dr fixxed it after my message) as already mentioned in the thread it has a options with that you can play with,even a 5 year old could set it up.

9/10 (1 point is missing cause of the path)

[Efficiency]

The popup looks really legit, it just works in the browser itself (makes sense) so if someone doesn't have his browser maximized you would see that it isn't legit.

Spoiler (Click to View)

but who uses his browser not maximized ?

the preset text does look real and you can use it if you are not creative.

with this method you can get your first bots without any problem as long as you have some shells (you can buy them really cheap if you can't shell websites yourself)

8/10 (just 8 points cause you need to hack sites to get it to work) in the end you can say it's a really useful method to get tons of bots as long as you can afford the hacked sites with a lot of traffic.

[Result]

Total result :

8.5/10

Obviously not. They will need to run the file. But like I said before, this would work nicely in Edge.
When you download certain file types, all you have to do is click "Open" and it will do so. There's no warnings like Chrome if you use the right type of files.

So, user agent detection, if Edge use this, it may prove effective if set up properly. ?

Can the pop up be customized?

This will show up on all window systems right?

So once they click install they will be redirected to a website and no pop ups or dl bars will be shown?

Can you change the text "install" ? and somewhat make it like next or close?

<https://hackforums.review/metropop-478.html>

Metropop is an interesting script , it takes advantage of common knowledge and preys on victims who use windows 8+.

Although when you purchase the script , you aren't instructed to use it maliciously , I assume that's it's main selling point.

Metropop alerts visitors viewing your website with a familiar popup that they may or may not have seen before.

Looking almost identical too the popups / smartscreen you see in windows 8+ , most users would assume it's legitimate.

Unless your file looks illegitimate , the majority of viewers wouldn't think twice / question it's integrity.

Although it does work to some extent , I can't help but feel like it isn't getting the job done.

The execution rates aren't quite what I expected , infact I haven't received a single install.

Now that could be bad marketing by me or possibly a lack of traffic / interest , but one things for sure , it's dissapointing.

Perhaps if you set up a nice niche , get some good backlinks and SEO , you would get a lot more downloads / installs.

I can't really complain too much though considering the price is cheaper than a burger!

One thing I am happy about is how lightweight the script is and the quality of Metropop.

It isn't exactly complicated putting it on your website , but configuring it to work with big websites takes a while.

Support wasn't exactly fantastic , but 'tl;dr' did attempt to help me out , so the thought was there at least.

When contacting the original author , I was advised that I wouldn't receive any help installing the script.

I was then deleted from skype & blocked by the original coder which was quite strange.

Having no clue how to configure it , I managed too finally get it up and running after messing with some settings.

It's practically the closest thing we have currently to a JDB (with the exception of EK's).

I'm not dissapointed with the product , I'm only disappointed by the results.

Hopefully in the future I can set up something better and update this review.

Do I think it's worth the buy? Yes

It's cheap , looks good , it's lightweight and honestly , configuring / installing the script isn't too difficult.

Give it a shot , you may have better results than I did!
