I have Windows 8.1 installed on a VPS that's stored in a datacenter that I RDP on to do 99% of my browsing / use Skype on.

On top of that, I have around ~7 different usernames, and all my info is being stored in KeePass (Password encryption and storage).

I don't tell anyone online anything that gives a hint on my location (What school I attend, what state I live in, how old I am), because in the long run those can all be put together to dox you.

So basically, my IP isn't on anything I login to (except HF) or on my Skype. I also have around ~7 usernames, so if someone googles one, they won't find all my accounts which limits the information they can get on me (given they know it's correct since each website says a different thing).

A VPN doesn't make you undoxable OR Anonymous :L They have many good uses but alone don't make you invisible.

What I reccomend: You are most likely going to get doxed unless you let it consume your life with your privacy. So instead, create a fake "person" this includes Name, Birthday, Family Name, and such. Write down things like "First dog" or other common security questions.

Then only use this fake person's credential's everywhere. Be consistent and use the same credentials when you can. This means if someone does dox you, multiple places report the same fake information, so they think this is your legit dox.

I don't, because no one gives a fuck about me, but if I needed to I would use a vm transparently routing all traffic through tor and exiting through botnet socks. The rest is just opsec common sense.

There are 2 levels of who you want to protect yourself from.

Do you want to protect yourself from other people doxing/monitoring you or do you want to protect yourself from the government?

I'll advance from there for a suitable answer for you.

I don't because I'm an irrelevant speck. So are you. No one in authority gives a shit about your info.

Well now we are pretty sure you live somewhere where the state system is used :)

Gotta be more careful man :)

One of the best tips to stay anonymous is use different usernames. Try to not use the same. Keep your personal details to yourself , even to good friends on the internet.

May I ask what country you are located in? This may help, due to different laws and such.

To remain anonymous i use hotspot shield, and when i get ratted from the massive amounts of porn i download i use norton internet security to get rid of it. Firefox also has a great mode called incognito so you are always anonymous. Good luck.
