personally when i check target first thing i look at the used script if it's public then i download it looking for sql injection and get parameter then try it on the live target

if the script private then i use bing and google and manual as krankenstein said

What i can give you as advice is always check robots.txt

In my experience, i was targeting medium - big site in my country and i've spent month trying to find anything, then i was let's see robots.txt and guess what, it contained link to unsecured picture upload
