You should turn off the required sign up to view content until the site grows a little.

It's not my site, just posting up a friend's to help him out.

I'll let him know that. You should def join though.

Noisy - November 21, 2015, 6:47 am

I agree regarding removing the required signup, as would rather see what the site has to offer before thinking about signing up.

sxploit - November 21, 2015, 6:50 am

Same as above. Remove the required sign in so we can see what we're getting into.

MentalWarfare - November 21, 2015, 6:58 am

1. No competitor sites that have hacking section.
2. Do not post sites you do not own.
5. No posting of sites requiring a login to view.

Not trying to hate but you kinda broke 3 rules.

Not trying to hate but you kinda broke 3 rules. Who's trying to compete? No one. I think it's greedy to have to force members to one site. Not all sites have the same goals.

Sorry if it broke the rules.

How is this statement you made relevant to what he just said.
They were trying to tell you one of the rules which is to not post sites of your own.

Other than that good luck with the site, hopefully this post doesn't get closed.

Unfortunately the email registration doesn't even work.

It does, you just need to check the junk mail.

Do you really think I'm that stupid? It doesn't work, end of story. I've tried multiple times, and there's nothing.

Starting to think so. As there's been 17 members since you posted. You must be doing something wrong.

Just because it works for those 17 members does not mean that it'll work for my specific email server you fool. I've probably joined more forums than you've even browsed; clearly you don't understand how the board settings can affect outgoing emails to certain email servers. Maybe if you had a clue there would've been more than 17. At this point you don't even know. I've already tried 3 different browsers, it's nothing on my end.

Btw, you can see how poorly managed this forum is when the web developer doesn't know what they're doing:

That looks more like a problem in the preprocessing of less/sass files but w/e, at least you found a reason to flame.

Explain how it changes my statement: "web developer doesn't know what they're doing"

It's not an issue with LESS/SASS, HTML, CSS, or even PHP itself, I can say that much. I wanted to see if my POST data was even going through and it didn't take long to notice issues with other things.

Edge of Nowhere - August 29, 2016, 5:24 pm

First off, "I've probably joined more forums than you've even browsed". Let's just say that I've been part of forums long before you were probably around the internet (assuming judging from what you wrote). I've been part of forums such as; DragonRage, Cruel-Intentionz, ChaseNET, SensoredNET, TheGoodSquad, NuclearWinterCrew, Minimo forums (can't remember the name), OSC, HH and MANY more that I can't think about. 15+ years is a long time. I've even BETA tested some software that was widely used (not even going to get into that).

As for the email not being received. That's your fault as it's being received by many mainstream email providers, as well as servers friends own, and other members own.

As for that error, errors are only human. Rather than bash, you could've posted where and how you got it.

This isn't a post about who's dick is better. Just trying to make you realize that people aren't the people you think they are.

Lante - August 30, 2016, 11:12 am

1. No competitor sites that have hacking section.
2. Do not post sites you do not own.
5. No posting of sites requiring a login to view.

Others mentioned this as well, you are still breaking 3 rules. The site has a hacking section (not allowed), and it is not view-able without login (not allowed). There's nothing you can say to refute this really so don't try.

The funny thing about this post is that I bet you're probably still a teen. As for where I got that, it wouldn't take a rocket scientist to look at the headers themselves to figure it out, I DID post them all. One more reason to show that you clearly don't know what you're doing.

Recommendation #1:

I would take away the CPA Ad that pops up right when you visit the site, it's kind of unprofessional, "Get 14,500 Pokemon coins, but you must first complete this survey".
Nevertheless just a recommendation, good luck with your site.
