Post your feedback and speculation in the thread, and please vote in the poll.

Public poll too.

It is wayyy to early to know that.

That is a good question. It appears a large amount of the groups here are unorganized and serve no purpose. Judging by your posts throughout the forum, I have faith in the group you will be leading. Good luck.

grady - December 16, 2015, 5:12 pm

I'd like to say we will be doing something different than current groups.

As for saying we'll be different from older groups I can't say, since I was neither experienced with any of them nor in any of them.

Gem - December 16, 2015, 5:15 pm

I doubt things will change.
time will show

Dawn? - December 16, 2015, 5:17 pm

Hmm, do I have two mins to cook some popcorn for the thread?

Who Soup - December 16, 2015, 5:19 pm

I have an amazing group idea that I'm probably going to put into effect once I get everything set up. I don't want to say too much as it will probably be kept very secret even when the group is made. What makes my group different from other groups is.

1. Our members will have top notch resources including housing, latest hardware/software, connections to successful individuals and companies, etc.

2. Our members can get a stable job in something that they love to do after they are accepted as one of our own
3. Our members will not only contribute greatly to the quality of Hackforums but develop new and innovative products and services in their field of choice.
4. We will be VERY selective on who we choose and NEVER re sell our group.
5. Though we will be contributing greatly to Hackfourms, we will not "flaunt" our group like a lot of groups tend to do.

I have a very secure and amazing plan that will hopefully go into play soon. Purchasing a group will be a major step but it will be a group like no one has seen before.

ZerFallen - December 16, 2015, 5:21 pm

I feel like it's a trend that won't stray or change noticeably. Having experience with being in your past groups I feel like you could accomplish something different. Although, I haven't seen enough yet to say that anything will change.

Solid methods that will certainly allow for a tight-knit, skilled group.

Limit. - December 16, 2015, 5:34 pm

Kind of leaning towards no since groups will always be groups. It's nice to see newer groups popping up, but my vote was it's just too early to tell as Dawn is only getting started. I'm sure F8 is in the planning stage, Razor's new group might seem to be a bit different, but we'll see. And the Crypto rebrand might turn out to be something but we'll see I suppose.

well the only reason that we might offer free medical/dental insurance is because it will be kind of like a "company" and I could technically offer free insurance to members because of the way it's set up.

The only relevant groups since 2013 are Red Lions and Null.

CRT - December 16, 2015, 6:30 pm

It's hard to say unless you're actually in the group. As a regular member the things you tend to see from groups are giveaways and contests in the name of the group and likewise with tutorials. I don't see how all this rebranding will change that. As I say though, this is from a regular members POV.

Obviously inside the group(s) a lot more will be going on, but members like myself won't see that.

I really hope to see a shift of focus back toward community involvement, instead of the mass sequestered lounge whoring that goes on now. Too early to tell though. I have high hopes for these new groups.

Xerotic - December 16, 2015, 8:34 pm

Eliminate buy-ins and have members that deserve to be in the group and yes they will change.

Silent Uprising - December 16, 2015, 8:39 pm

Will groups change? Hmmm...

Group owners usually like to profit off members in the group such as putting buy-ins to join. Buy-ins lead to LQ members joining.

Group owners themselves want to gain popularity through out the forum they invite a lot of people hoping their group gets well known along with them.

Group owners themselves are not very skilled in anything particular and they are the base of the group. If they arn't a strong base, the group won't be very skilled.

If part of those factors change, yes groups can change. But this forum has many teens not specialized in anything, so it is very hard to find an active group of members who have a talent.

Even if they groups don't change...Group members tend to become friends with each other and gain knowledge from each other doing little side projects and making their own little "group" outside of HF. So even if groups don't change, they still have a positive outcome on people.

TLDR; I think groups are slowly changing but some things need improving before groups become one-of-a-kind.

I think the whole point of the rebrand was to sell buyins since he couldn't sell his group.

Yeah but that's only 1 of the 4 that have been rebranded. So I mean... we will have to see what happens. Personally, I don't think groups have been that bad lately and I have high hopes for these new groups as well :)

Ahri????? - December 16, 2015, 8:42 pm

I was never a fan of most HF groups. I found most to be circle jerks so my opinion has stayed the same since I joined this site.

IMO the only groups that have made something out of their names are Red Lions, Titans & Legends. I really do think that Dawn & Enigma are going to bring something new to the table. As for DARK, well, Razor's doing a good job of keeping things secret.

What about Archive, or Void... or even poor ole Divine? I mean there are a lot of groups that do their own thing too, like Void didn't have a lot to do with outside of it's subforum but that wasn't what it was meant for. It was a more civil and "intelligent" SRPP imo. You could have huge debates/discussions without being attacked and people start flaming lol. Or Axiom... they've at least tried at multiple tournaments and have a really nice atmosphere for actual gamers.

I guess what I'm trying to say is that the biggest thing to a group for me is the private subforum. And I emphasized private because groups are private. They don't absolutely have to be doing something with/for the community, although I do believe that for like every 4 groups, 1 should be community based. Just so that groups are contributing at least once in awhile to something besides their own subforum.

Yes I know, I didn't list every group... don't throw a friggen hissy fit over me not mentioning Specialists or AnimeFAN or Null, etc.

Best of luck to you. You have high aspirations. Way to think positive.

As far as for Hex, it seems too early to tell. We can all only hope that a re-brand is more than just a re-brand.

No offense, but all the time you spend making threads about how bad groups are, you (a group owner) could of made a great group.

Tf you talking about man. Hex's groups are some of the best experiences I had since Wrath. I mean I won't lie the later month were pretty shit when Hex was considering selling the group which ultimately turned the group into a lounge--however I'm glad that he has his mind set now on continuing to run the group, this will most likely result in improvements.

Dood - December 16, 2015, 10:32 pm

It's interesting to see that although other group leaders shit on Instinct/Nightfall for being a lounge group, almost every group is a lounge group now

Xepher The Cat - December 16, 2015, 10:34 pm

Too soon to say but I seriously hope a new generation of groups come.

Premortal - December 17, 2015, 1:06 am

Of course not. I don't think a poll was necessary to see that that's what everyone thinks and pretty much knows by now. As the owner of one of these new groups you should know this firsthand.

Cooligan - December 17, 2015, 4:52 am

It all depends on the group leaders/owners.

Time will tell, as always.

Cyam - December 17, 2015, 9:32 am

No, probably not.

Greedy people buying groups nowadays.

Uriel - December 17, 2015, 2:15 pm

Absolutely not.

Groups have been on a pretty consistent downhill path since 2012-2013, with only a few groups being worth a damn. You used to always have those few groups that were shit and everyone knew it, but it seems like over time as groups change hands there are more and more of those. I think this is largely because people want to see their money back on a group, which at such high purchase costs and no split ownership, I can't blame them. It takes a special person to invest that much cash for solely fun with no intention of making it back and more over time.

I hope your new group goes well, as they usually have.

Lithe - December 17, 2015, 2:17 pm

Way too early to tell. Its been around a day, let's see how things go.
